I was pretty shocked to see Kong show up on time, but I didn't say anything about it - Miss Tomoe was there, and she'd probably made a point of escorting her. No...Guess I should say Miss Tomoe dropped her off, like an obliging older sister. Or an overenthusiastic young mother, getting her little girl to play with the other kids for the first time. She smiled her bright, understanding smile – edged that night with a little bit of mischief – as she urged Kong forward, closer to me. ...It was definitely more like a mother. Couldn't tell offhand if Kong really wanted to be here, but it seemed like Mommy Tomoe knew what was best.

They'd spent a lot of time deciding what Kong should wear, though. Or at least, Miss Tomoe had. Kong herself looked completely out of place. Wouldn't look at me. Probably embarrassed about how...clean she was. Like she'd slept. Showered. Hadn't been drinking, or even smoking, for at least the past few hours. It made her look younger. Cuter. Like an ordinary girl. I felt like kind of a pervert after a couple of seconds, but it wasn't like...wasn't like this was a booty call or something. She shooed Miss Tomoe away as she leaned in one last time to fuss with the collar on her jacket, and after the blonde left, she mumbled something to me and held out her hand. Turned bright red, too.

"...Don't let go. Not for a second."

...It was cool out, that night. Not freezing, but colder than we usually got in Santa Destroy. Cold enough for little snowflakes to fall from the sky, glittering in the city lights like a thousand tiny stars. I could feel them melt against my skin, tiny prickles of chill and water that dissolved instantly. Looking back, we left a trail of empty space in our wake, as she tugged me along with her small, slender hand.

That night, the whole world was gray. Everything except for her, anyway. Kong. ...Murderface.

She told me that was normal. It was normal not to feel even the wind. Normal not to hear anything but our own soft steps on the pavement. Normal to feel like we were the only ones in the world, even as we slipped through crowds of frozen salarymen. ...Asked her if it was normal to hold onto a girl's hand for this long, and she just huffed out that soft little noise and ignored the question.

The universe in black and white. Murderface's World. It reflected her perfectly. Solemn. Quiet. Mysterious and harsh, but...sure. It felt grounded and real, more real than it did in color. ...Didn't tell her any of that, either. Would have been weird. Even weirder than being dragged down the street by my hand. If I did tell her, she probably would have thought it was stupid. And it would have shattered this peaceful, all-consuming silence, something I felt like she didn't want to do.

...I sped up a little, and even though she looked away, I caught her blushing. Guess I...might have been, too. But all I had to do was pull my scarf up over my face. ...Just a little cold, Kong.

I didn't know where we were going. Took about fifteen minutes of being pulled down Mitakhiara's motionless streets before I thought to ask, and when I did, Kong slowed to a stop. ...She didn't think about it, when she came here. It was just...her place. A place for her to come to be alone. To get away from the bullshit. I sort of...hoped I knew what she meant. That she wanted to share it. …Didn't say that either, though. I just told her that I sort of understood. Used to be the same way when I'd dream. Long, aimless walks to nowhere. Fuck the destination, the journey was the whole thing. Something softened in her expression, and I shot her a smile.

...She didn't see it, thanks to the scarf, and I felt really stupid after a moment. Like she could read my mind, though, she laughed a little bit anyway.

"I..." She stumbled over her words a little, like she wasn't accustomed to them. "I'm glad you get it." ...It was something rare. A moment of honesty, without the shell. The fear and distrust. ...Like the black and white world around us, it was an endless moment without all the bullshit.

...Do you like hurting people?

"What?" Couldn't help but laugh at the look she gave me. It seemed like it'd be completely natural to Kong, but… guess she wasn't the kind of person who thought about things like that. I repeated the question, and she made a face like I'd just sprouted a frog head.

"No. I shoot people to help save the orphanage where I grew up." Knew it. She was lying about the amnesia the whole time.

She slipped a cigarette in her mouth, shaking her head at my shitty joke. I fumbled for the lighter in my pocket, then lit it for her. ...We had to keep holding hands, after all. She had a way of talking without taking her cigarette out – like an old pro, the hero of a detective movie - and as she responded, she passed one my way. Wanted to know why I asked.

...It was kind of stupid, but it was the first thing the old Warmaster – Miss Marigold – asked me, when I met her. ...It took me a couple of days to come up with an answer. Next time I saw her after that, I tried to stab her in the stomach. She just crushed my knife into powder. Wasn't even worried, or angry. Kind of looked like she'd stepped in something, if I had to put a word to it. She told me I didn't like it enough, if that was all it took to stop me. Then she got to work on beating it into me.

"...So? Do you like hurting people enough now?"

I don't come when I stab someone in the throat. ...But it's kind of become an art. I'm proud of it. I enjoy it. It's what I do.

She repeated ‘an art’ to herself, with a hint of a smile, and nodded just slightly. Wasn’t that different for a Vindicare, at the end of the day. Not like I didn’t know that, but back home, we made a pretty big deal out of it. It’d only become more of a joke with the new Warmaster, Mary...Totally Awesome Sweet Alabama Liquid Snake, the Vindicare Prima. At least, among the few people that could say it and get away with it. …I rattled off a couple of my favorites.

‘Callidus don’t remember how to cry. Eversors never knew. But it doesn’t matter; Vindicares do it enough for all of us.’

‘How many Vindicares does it take to screw in a lightbulb? Nobody knows – they won’t get closer than twenty-one feet.’

…Alright, that second one was pretty bad. But it was a great way to piss them off. They always got pretty eager to prove you wrong. And when they tried to take a swing…Try punching an Eversor once, see what happens. Callidus, at least in the Eighth, weren’t a whole lot nicer about it, either.

Kong looked annoyed. Maybe even angry. ...Didn’t seem much happier when I told her she was one of the good ones. I scrambled to add ‘Like Miss Tomoe’ on the end, and it seemed to help.

A couple of quiet minutes passed, with both of us finishing our cigarettes and blowing the smoke into the air, trying to freeze it into patterns. I put mine out on the concrete next to me before I spoke again, about the second question the Warmaster asked me.

Do you like flowers? Do you understand them?

…Guess it was two, but they were asked together. Every time, together.

“...You’re making that up.” She flicked her cigarette butt over the side of the building. ...It froze mid-flight, naturally. ...I told her that no, that was one of the other things she’d ask us. That was the one she asked us the most, the most important one. Usually after trying to kill us with flowers.

It didn’t help us understand them, but it did make Annie start cutting every flower she saw in half. So that was pretty funny.

...She still didn’t seem to care. Not that I blamed her. It took...it took me a while to care at all, too. To understand it at all. ...Didn’t say that, though I started to, a few times. While we sat there.

...Blue roses. I broke the silence again. Every night with Kong, I broke the silence more times than the rest of my life combined. Kind of a nice feeling. Neither of us…really had to talk, with the other there. It was always a choice. Always important.

“What?”

I fumbled with my Japanese for a minute. I'd become one of the more fluid speakers in the Officio – along with V and Annie, and nobody was sure about Nakajima – but it was...it needed to be said right. ...Needed to be worded in a way someone like...someone like Murderface would understand. Without it sounding completely stupid.

Blue roses were the first flower I came to understand. ...They're my favorite. Symbols of mystery and impossible dreams. Just by existing, they prove that…that they're not really impossible.

...Nope. Still stupid. My cheeks burned red, and I tried to distract myself by fiddling with my skirt.

...Kong stared at me for a minute, like she couldn't believe what I'd just said. Her jaw worked a little, and at first, I thought she was just going to say 'what?' again. ...In the end, she just squeezed my hand, staring down at the frozen world below. ...Her expression had gone soft again, and after thinking about it for a second, I leaned over and pressed my lips against her cheek. Just for a second.

Just to thank her for not laughing.

The last thing I remembered from that night was the smell of her hair, along with the feel of her face buried in my neck. We weren't drunk this time, just...happy to be together. I guess. I was happy. She...seemed to be. It was a little cold to be lying around, but she wasn't. Even with cold concrete at my back, it was the warmest I'd felt in...a long time.

I didn't dream, which made waking up even more jarring than it usually was. There was a heavy weight on my body, lighter than Kong, but apparently balancing on my torso. Whatever it was was poking my cheek, clearly unaware of how rare it was for me to sleep without screaming myself awake. Or dying. …Maybe that's what it thought happened. It breathed heavily onto my face, leaving a scent of sugar and something I couldn't quite identify.

"Wendyyy..." A small, soft whimper, from whatever was poking me. At length, I finally opened my eyes, only to see two blood-red coals in the midst of a universe of darkness. It was Lily, her face so close to mine that her bunny hood swallowed the entirety of my vision. ...It took a second to process, then gently took hold of her midsection and lifted her off of me, mumbling out a few words of greeting to the little squirt.

It was the earliest part of the morning, with the whole world cast in a blue-gray glow, and for a moment I groggily wondered if I was still frozen in time. ...That wasn't possible, though. Not without Kong, wherever she went.

“Wendyyy...we hafta get ready for the festivaaal...” Lily pouted under her hood. She was trying not to be a brat, I could tell, but we’d stayed a few extra days in Japan just so we could all go together. Dorothy and Annie went out of their way to pick out yukata for everyone and everything. Seemed like Lily was jumping the gun, though. Probably made a mistake in telling her about how good festival food was supposed to be; we’d end up getting there hours early if she got any more impatient. …If you could be early for a festival. Wasn’t really sure.

Not like I wasn’t kind of excited, myself. But it would have been nice to… ...Ah, whatever. Not her kind of thing anyway. I scraped myself up off the roof and stretched, trying to blink the light from my eyes. Had to remember to thank the kid later. She probably snuck off to sniff me out like this, and she’d transformed to do it. Probably even used a little magic.

As we headed down off the building and back toward our hotel, I noticed something sticking out of one of Lily’s big, baggy sleeves. A little hint of blue. Asked her about it, and she gave me a wide-eyed look, like I’d caught her sneaking cookies again. She evaded the question a bit, but I managed to convince her I wasn’t going to be mad, and asked her to show it to me. It wasn't as big a deal as she was making it out to be; probably just found a little treasure somewhere. When she held it up, though, my breath caught in my throat.

...It was a blue rose. She said it was next to me. Found it before she woke me up.

...Motherfucker.

Prose Magica
The Ballad of the Seventeenth

Odette groaned. Rain pounded on the steel hide of Sleepy Sue. Her phone was ringing somewhere. All she could remember of the previous day was being frustrated at a lack of leads and getting drunk out of her mind with Lotte. She'd found her culprit - Fennel Vance - but little more than that. Fennel had been one of the Officio's top 'liquidators' as Fubey gently put it. Her speciality laid in terminations, assassinations, eviscerations and a host of other unsavoury ations that would drive any sane girl mad. Odette was only left to wonder why the incubator hadn't kept a closer eye on someone so deep in blood.

The one-eyed magical girl stretched her arm out, feeling around the floor of Sleepy Sue for her phone. After a few moments of unintentionally feeling up, then rolling over, the blonde Callidus, Odette grabbed hold of her smart phone and rolled back into position. For god's sake, she thought, had they really ended up sleeping together twice in one week? Odette sighed to herself. She must have been even lonelier than she thought.

"Yo," she muttered into her phone.

"Odette, it's Therese," the warmaster greeted. "We've got something about the case that you need to hear. Something big."

"Whatimezit?" The silver-haired girl mumbled.

"It's- It's almost noon," Therese replied. There was the distinct burst of static as she let out a long sigh. "I even waited until I was sure you'd be up. I told you that you should stay in warmaster suite. You're starting to slip again."

"'m not slipping," said the small Eversor as she hopped out of her cot and scooped up a pair of jeans. "Just frustrated 'sall." After a moment's thought she added, "'nd maybe a bit hungover. What's the news?"

"Two of our Eversors were investigating a murder," the warmaster answered. "Looks like they've found where your mystery girl is hiding."

"No shit?" Odette gasped as she threw on a bra and fresh white t-shirt. "Where is she?"

"A club downtown, it looks like. Working for a small-time gangbanger. But you really should hear the rest of this in person. That, and I don't think you've gotten a chance to see my office yet. Isn't that right?"

"Alright, alright," the one-eyed girl grumbled. "Your office in the same place mine was?"

"There's only one warmaster's office, Odette."

"I'm not slipping. I promise," Odette smirked as she threw on her jacket. "See you in a few."

"I'll see you then," the warmaster giggled just before the line went dead.

Sleepy Sue's engine revved as Odette pocketed her phone and took a seat at her make-shifted desk. The case files were stilled splayed out across it with lines and paragraphs circled and underlined with red pen. The former warmaster's gaze swept over each page as she let out a long breath. It all seemed so worthless now. After spending nearly a week pouring over the notes, everything seemed to just fall into her lap. With an inward chuckle, she suddenly recalled that working assignment's as warmaster was mostly the same way. She could have others running around gathering information and it still counted toward her own quota. Somehow.

Perhaps, Odette thought, it wouldn't be so bad to try an earn her position back. Therese already came dangerously close to treating her as if she were still her superior. Far too many people did. Odette couldn't decide if it was flattering or troublesome that so many still held her in high-esteem. You don't sit as warmaster for three years and expect everyone to just accept your abdication, it seemed. No matter how callous and irresponsible she had grown.

>> ☐ Prose Magica: The Ballad of the Seventeenth Part 7 archivalfag 06/04/13(Tue)14:09 No.25239017

Odette's thoughts were interrupted by her blonde companion's stirrings, no doubt roused by the dull thrumming of engines. With a strong yawn, Lotte propped herself up with one arm and ran a hand through her hair.

"Mornin," Odette called out, barely bothering to look up from her work. She'd already cleared off the desk and taken out her poetry notepad, lightly tapping her pen against the wood.

"Yo," the blonde greeted. "Where we going?"

"Terry's," the one-eyed girl replied. "Said she has something for the case."

"Can I come?" Lotte asked, grinning from ear to ear.

Odette shrugged. "Up to you. Didn't think you two got along."

"Either that or I stay in the car," the Callidus responded, returning the shrug. "It's creepy to be in Sue alone."

Odette spun around, mouth agape. "Did you just call my baby creepy?"

"Yeah, I mean," Lotte waved a finger around lazily, "you hear that? Engines. WHERE ARE HER ENGINES?"

The blonde gave a knowing nod as the two settled into a comfortable silence. They didn't have much to talk about anymore, it seemed. They'd told each other every story they had, didn't share much in the way of interests and hadn't worked together on any assignments in months. After a few moments, Odette glanced over, only to find the other girl quietly staring at her with an implacable grin on her face.

"You're really pretty," Lotte responded almost immediately, almost as if she had been waiting for the question.

Odette's pale face turned a bright pink as she forced herself to look back down at her notebook. "Don't be weird, Lotte. You promised you wouldn't make things weird."

True, Odette had always been told she had a pretty face. It had a certain mature charm to it despite her small stature - the kind of face that seemed liked that of a caring older sister. Or, at least, it would were it not for the near constant scowling and ill temper.

The one-eyed girl found herself tapping her pen and drumming her fingers faster and faster as her mind wandered. She was suddenly made painfully aware of the busty blonde lying buck-naked in her bed.

Odette thought about it for a good second before shaking her head and rolling her eyes. "I just got dressed," she huffed. "And we're almost there."

"Ah come on," the blonde drawled, laying the covers over herself in just the right way to show off her curves while keeping the important bits hidden. "Just a quick one."

"I'll throw you out in the rain, Laufson," Odette grumped. "You know I will. And I'll keep your clothes."

The silver-haired girl simply smiled and turned back to her poetry, humming to herself.

Lotte grunted and lifted herself out of bed, crawling over to the pile of clothes left on the floor. As she looked around the interior of the armoured car, the Callidus couldn't help but shiver and hold herself.

"Do you have the AC on or something, O?" She asked, quickly throwing on as much clothing as possible.

Odette shook her head. "Nope."

Lotte looked around, still holding herself, suddenly looking even more nervous than before, then nodded silently.

The tall Callidus and the short Eversor breezed through security at the Officio's headquarters, making for the first of the Violet-clearance floors - the warmaster's office. The two stood silently in the elevator, dripping wet from the rain, for several minutes until Odette felt a hand prodding her shoulder. She turned her head to find Lotte toying with a crunchy, wet and white substance between her fingers.

"Hey, O," she started, examining the stuff inquisitively, "is this frost?"

Odette shrugged and mumble a quick "I dunno" as the doors slid open.

There were several doors in the corridor; each one an office for the rank leaders. Most were empty for the time being, with higher-ranked magical girls handling business in the other major cities within the Officio's territory. In contrast to the incubator's barren hall, the office corridor was decorated with potted plants and modern art. Odette silently questioned exactly how much Therese had changed. She remembered dimmer lights and muted tones instead of bright pastel shades.

The silver-haired girl knocked firmly on the door furthest door, while her companion cried "ROOM SERVICE!"

After a moment, the door was opened, not by Therese, but by an incredulous looking Megan Laurie. The short, black-haired girl blinked a few times as her bangs fell over her eyes yet again.

"You're not the warmaster," remarked Lotte.

The small Eversor - but not quite as small as Odette, she noticed - floundered about for a few seconds before she was rescued by Therese calling from within.

"Odette?" She shouted. "Is that you?"

>> ☐ Prose Magica: The Ballad of the Seventeenth Part 7 archivalfag 06/04/13(Tue)14:10 No.25239046

Therese's office, Odette noted, was rather different from the one she used to call her own. It was modern and chic, with the walls painted a light grey and all the furniture in black. She even had a sofa pushed into one of the corners closest to the door, which was currently occupied by the second member of the Eversor duo, Mona Bernard.

Odette furrowed her brow and scanned the room as the warmaster stepped up to her.

"Was this room always here?" She asked, a look of confusion on her face as she shook Therese's hand.

"This room," the silver-haired said, cautiously pointing all around, "was this always here?"

"Yes," the warmaster answered, nodding much in the same way one would to a mental patient. "This used to be your office. Remember?"

"Nah, nah," Odette laughed. "My office had those sweet woodcarvings and a throne and..." Her voice trailed off as her face contorted into a look of sad understanding. "What did you do to my office?"

"It looked ridiculous, Odette," Therese replied with a slight roll of her eyes. "You don't expect me to work in an office that looked like something out Lord of the Rings, do you? You want me to sit in a throne carved with YOUR greatest moments?"

"What did you do with my stuff?!" The one-eyed magical girl whined, clearly distressed.

"I threw it away," Therese stated bluntly.

Odette's mouth openned and closed several times as she tried to form words. All that managed to come out was, "Buh-but my throne..."

The warmaster let out a long sigh. "Look. If it's that important, your throne is still in storage. It's," she waved her hand in the air, trying to find the right words, "an icon, I guess. All of the girls from back then recognize it. I couldn't just throw it out like that."

"Good, goo-"

>> ☐ Prose Magica: The Ballad of the Seventeenth Part 7 archivalfag 06/04/13(Tue)14:11 No.25239052

It was then that the warmaster suddenly turned her attention to the Callidus, who had taken a laid-back position on the couch with both arms wrapped around the two junior Eversors as she regaled a story of Odette's earlier days.

"And so Snake says to Odette-"

The blonde looked up and blinked innocently. "What? I'm not allowed to hang out with an old friend?"

"It's fi-" Odette started, but was suddenly silenced by Therese raising her hand.

"The time when we were friends has come and gone, Lotte," the warmaster growled. "If you have no relevance to the case, I would kindly ask you to leave."

"Terry," a calm, cold voice rang out. The room temperature took a dive as all eyes were suddenly on Odette. The small girl took a step forward until she was practically standing on the warmaster's toes. "Lotte's with me," she hissed. Therese felt one of Odette's delicate hands gently alight on her shoulder, then violently pull her down to the smaller girl's level. "Warmaster or not, you do not shush me like a child."

There was a delicate clinking of chains as Therese's hammer materialized in her hand. It had always been a stark contrast to her usual demeanour - and a good reminder of her temper - to see the enormous slab of metal. The hammer was small enough to be comfortably wielded in one hand, but large enough to be used with both for a little extra power. Most striking of all, however, was the shining silver chain attached to the end of the haft, which snaked up the warmaster's forearm and coiled around it.

Odette's eye shifted to the weapon for a moment before returning to glare at Therese. "It's just Lotte. Calm down," she said, her voice coming out soothing yet stern.

The rusty-haired girl glanced down at the hammer, then took a deep breath. A chill went up her spine as she noticed that she could suddenly see the air escaping her lips. With a nod, she stepped back and the hammer disintegrated. "You're... You're right. I, uh, I'm sorry."

"Atta girl," Odette said, grinning as she slapped a hand on the warmaster's back. "Gotta keep that temper in check. If we're gonna rumble, we better make sure to sell tickets first. So what are we waiting for?"

Therese adjusted her cap and cleared her throat loudly, still slightly embarassed about losing herself so easily. "We're, erm, just waiting on Fubey. The incubator's were supposed to be having a meeting. He should be here any second-"

As if on cue, there was a soft knock on the door, sounding as if it came from a mere foot off the ground. The occupants looked at each other, as if each expecting someone else to open it. Odette caved first, giving a reluctant huff as she pulled the door open. With a dull whirring sound, the Seventeenth incubator rolled in atop his mighty steed.

"Odette, how lovely to see you," he said as he entered. "I apologize for my tardiness. I was a few minutes late to the meeting and had to stay behind for the Eighth to fill me in. Ah, Miss Laufson has joined us? I trust you are finished with your previous assignment?"

"Oh," the Callidus piped up, "yeah, was going to go see you about that. All taken care of."

"Excellent, excellent," the incubator said, beaming with a look nearing contentment. "A pleasure to have you on board then."

"Fubey, I didn't buy you that for you to ride on," Therese grumbled.

The incubator made the Roomba do a quick three-sixty as he entered the room, then hit a button causing it to go about its usual vacuuming route.

"Ah, but this way I can clean the office everywhere I go."

Odette couldn't keep her eyes off of it as she took a seat on the sofa's arm. "What did the Eighth say about it?"

"He," the incubator started, making a point to avert his gaze, "thought it was a bit silly. In much stronger terms."

"One," Lotte added. "He won-"

The blonde was interrupted as Therese loudly cleared her throat. "Ladies," she said, sweeping her gaze across the room, "I believe we're all present."

Mona shared a brief look with her partner, then nodded as she pulled her phone from her pocket. "This was recorded last night at about, uh," she flipped the phoen around and squinted at it, "just after eleven. We thought we were interrogating a man about a gang-killing. We got a bit more than we bargained for."

With a swipe of her finger, Rossi's testimony began playing. The room was silent - save for Fubey's Roomba going about its route - as the terrified man describe Charles Helk, Club Mist, the girl with the golden chain and finally the soul gems being sold on the black market. No one said a word for several minutes after it ended. Odette nodded to herself as the information processed, each piece slowly falling into place.

"Meg and Mona, was it?" The one-eyed girl finally asked.

"Y-yeah," the taller Eversor answered.

Odette turned to Therese and the incubator. "These two are getting promotions, right?"

"They have only been with us for a month and a half, but," the incubator pondered, stroking his chin with his prehensile moustache, "I suppose something could be arranged."

Therese nodded in agreement, then turned her attention back to the recording. "So I suppose that's it then. We hit the club and see what we can find."

"Whoa, whoa, whoa, kiddo," Odette laughed, making a calming gesture. "Hold your horses here. We don't just storm the castle without a plan."

>> ☐ Prose Magica: The Ballad of the Seventeenth Part 7 archivalfag 06/04/13(Tue)14:13 No.25239091

"Then what do you propose we do," the warmaster asked, adding a stressed nearly growled, "Odette?" as she cast a glare at the Callidus.

The silver-haired girl paced around the office for several minutes, deep in thought, before finally leaning back on Therese's desk with a satisfied look plastered on her face. "Alright, here's what we're gonna do," she started. "We'll hit them tonight. After we're done here, I'll take Lotte and check out Chuckles' apartment, see if we can dig anything up. That note left at my place still doesn't make sense. I'll swing by when we're done and pick you up. We get Lotte to scout the club, figure things out. We make our plan and then, and ONLY then, do we bust this thing open."

"That... that works," Therese mumbled.

Meanwhile, the two juniors were whispering amongst themselves, slowly drawing the attention of the rest of the room. After a few moments, the taller of the two cleared her throat while the other twiddled her thumbs nervously.

"We, um, we were just wondering," Mona said, taking a nervous gulp, "if we were still on the assignment. Just, cause, y'know, the thing with Helk is technically ours. I mean, it's okay if you don't want us-"

"That's fine," Odette nodded and shurgged. "I'll pick you two up after we're done too. It'll be a party."

"Actually," Therese said, glancing at the clock on the wall, "I just remembered I have an appointment later. You four okay to hang out until I'm done?"

"We can take care of them until then," Lotte smirked, sidling up to the two juniors. "I can tell them the story of Odette's sweet sixteen party."

"Oh hell no," the one-eyed girl groaned. "Come on, Lotte. Nobody wants to hear that one. Let's get going."

The blonde stood up, then turned to Therese after a thought crossed her mind. "You go on ahead. I need to talk to Ter-Bear in private about something."

"Well?" She asked expectantly, folding her hands and cocking an eyebrow. "Make it quick."

"Listen," Lotte sighed, taking a moment to collect her thoughts. "I know you don't like me. Jealous that I'm fucking Odette and you're not or whatever the fuck it is. That doesn't matter right now."

"Lotte..."

"You had to have noticed it," the blonde stated firmly. "The cold. You felt it, right?"

The warmaster nodded slowly. "What of it?"

"'What of it'," Lotte groaned and rolled her eyes, "you fucking know 'what of it'. Today the rain was freezing on her damn jacket." Lotte threw down her arms and shook her head violently, her words panicked. "She's coming back."

Therese glared at the Callidus as understanding suddenly struck her. "So what is this? A warning? A threat?"

"Dunno," the Callidus made a sly grin and giggled to herself. "Maybe both, maybe neither. But I'd watch out if I were you. Even I don't know if I should be afraid or not."

***

Odette pulled her ear away from the door and stepped back, trying to lean against the wall and act natural. She took a deep breath and looked up and down the hall. For a fraction of a second, she could swear she saw a girl with long silvery-white hair and a black baseball cap grinning at her from the end of the hallway. The one-eyed girl shoved her hands into her pockets, suddenly aware that they were freezing cold.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You are a Magical Girl, and you fell asleep in your costume again.

>>25338961

Well, not like it matters much, the costume thing. You don't wear anything else, whether you're lounging around, getting drunk, or doing your job. You just cancel the transformation and re-engage it to get a clean one if the one you were wearing gets too dirty, or people start complaining.

Of course, that doesn't happen anymore, what with you...getting into the habit of showering regularly again. And being the newly-elected, if reluctant, leader of the agency you're employed in.

Warmaster, they call you now. More than a thousand magical girls under your command, with only the Ninth Incubator as your superior. You've even got the hat to show for it, although you're pretty leery about wearing the fucking thing around girls. Something about it...makes them act strangely around you.

Warmaster. A part of you still can't quite believe it. Another part of you thinks this is all a setup, somehow, and the universe will soon come crashing through your door any moment now, to restore the balance that's been inadvertently tilted to your favor.

. . .Well, if it's going to, then it'd better hurry the fuck up while you're still in your comfortable chair. It'll be the only way it can get you without you shooting back.

You're too comfortable at the moment to get up for anything. Even Mami could show up naked and you'd probably just sit there until she initiated, or something.

But anyway. You don't really have that much to complain about. You've got a new apartment. One of your aides, a green-haired Callidus, is snoring softly on your new sofa. It's early morning - the sun isn't even up yet, although it'll be in a few moments - and for the first time you're not even waking up wishing you died in your sleep. Not even the smallest twinge of a hangover, and you remember having a bit more red wine while Tomoe Mami gave you that haircut you were so eager to get.

...Yes. That haircut. It took a bit to talk Mami down into curling your hair into drills, or braiding it. You'd settled for a trim so it's not reaching down to your ass, and had her teach you how to do a ponytail properly with it. She'd tied it for you with a length of purple ribbon. You remember talking to her about your file, as you leafed through it while she continued to trim your hair with neat little snips of her scissors. About how an impressive amount of it was redacted, whole sections of it deleted, with little left to make sense of. You remember being displeased about that.

You don't remember much after that. The last thing you remember was Mami showing you how you looked like with a hand mirror she'd taken from her purse. You...liked it. The ponytail was strange, but it felt right. You also remember stammering something that sounded suspiciously like a confession, you're not too sure. She blushed at this, smiled, and then placed a kiss on your forehead. Telling you to get some rest while she cleaned up.

She must have left after doing so. Your file is still on your lap, open where you'd been reading it last. Mami had taken off your jacket, though, and had draped it on you like a makeshift blanket.

...Well, comfortable as you are at the moment, you can't help but feel a bit twitchy. You've...you've got something to do today, right? Something important? Just can't seem to put your finger on it, annoying thing.

The team was requested for Iori's (and by extension, 765 Idols) protection. I'm not sure if they'll be enough.

Obiviously we need to get plans for the stadium and go over them with the normal security, then overlay with Magical Girl units.

Well, there's no point in waking Midori up, not so early in the morning. She's only been discharged out of sick bay, and that was with you rushing the entire thing. Besides, it's not like you can't piece it all together yourself. You're not some sort of invalid.

You leaf through your file first, see what the mutant bastard cat actually had the decency to leave in amongst everything he's redacted. Seriously, he's redacted almost everything. Dates, places, people you've talked to - nearly all of them, except those in the same Officio as you, were all censored. Only your kill tally was left untouched, and...well, it's an impressive record.

Nearly five hundred kills, here. Witches, Magical Girls, Witches and non-Magical hostiles combined. Certainly nothing compared to Kharn's - a neat little table beside your kill tally described Kharn as someone with the highest count at one thousand, with Kirika at nine hundred. Sayaka, hilariously, seems to be catching up to her former teacher, at seven hundred. The rest of the list are Eversors, with a few vindicares here and there. Kyoko and Mami are curiously out of table's range.

From what else you can infer from the heavily-modified file, you've had your share of Witch missions. Kharn and Malal have also taken you along with them on some overseas Officio visits. America, you were expecting. Somewhat. But...Australia? Britain? Egypt? Thailand? And a mission that involved dinosaurs of all things?

...Man, fuck amnesia. It's made you miss so much.

Besides that, nothing else. Nothing about the last Walpurgisnacht, the one that got Malal and most of the Culexus killed. Nothing meeting someone named Wendy. Sure, you met the Eighth's Warmaster, Totally Awesome sweet Alabama Liquid Snake, but...nothing about a Wendy. Either the girl in your dreams was lying, or she was one of the many names redacted on the list.

You close the file - making a note to interrogate Kyuubey about this - and check your inventory.

Well, first of all. You've got all four Golden Weapons with you, with the XI Golden Weapon currently clasped around your wrists in bangle form. You've nearly forgotten about them, to be frank, they were that comfortable. ...Maybe you should leave the others in your vault, just to be safe. Sure, it's handy to keep them close at hand, so that you could use them when you need them and no one else has to deal with the temptation of even touching one, but...something tells you that it's just inviting bad luck, to be carrying so many at one time.

You're currently out of painkillers, for some reason, although you don't remember emptying the two canisters you had that one time.

You're also out of cigarettes for some reason. ...Not even an empty pack, you just don't have any, period.

You've got your cashcard, and your keycard. Kyoko must have given it back to you last night.

Your Soul Gem is currently at 100% purity, or at least that's what you can tell. It's...harder to gauge now, really.

You also have your smartphone, and you've received two messages since you've been sleeping. The first is from Iori, wishing you a goodnight with a decidedly-neutral smiley face. The second is from Kyuubey, politely reminding you that you're to join Kirishima Ruri for breakfast at 8 AM in the Hotel she's currently residing.

It's hilarious how the Universe has a way of reminding you of things you'd rather forget.

What do you do now? You've still got a few hours before the appointed time. ...More than enough time, actually.

[]Wake Midori up.
[]Meet Pinky and give her the pancakes you promised her.

Well, you're awake anyway. No point in going back to sleep. Besides, you have a promise to keep, even if you've only just remembered it.

Taking the plate of pancakes from your side table, you lever yourself off of your favorite chair, stumble your way through the dimly-lit apartment, and stop at the kitchen to get it reheated. Thankfully, you find a small microwave oven in one of the closets, hidden behind the instant noodles. You plug that in and nuke what's left of your Mami-made dinner - your stomach grumbling all the while as the scent of syrup-soaked pancake starts to waft from the little oven that could.

The oven's bell dings, and you take the plate back to your chair, placing the now-warm ceramic back onto your side table. You sit back down, and glance at the still-sleeping form of Midori, making sure that she's not yet awake for what you're about to do - and it's then that you take hold of the rim of your shield. Pushing against it to turn the entire iron plate one hundred and eight degrees to the right, forcing the suddenly-shrieking gears to lock into place.

A heavy metallic click, the crunch of gearteeth crashing together, and time comes to a dead stop. The world, as always, loses its color - reduced to a dull cast-iron gray. Silence fills your ears, along with the sound of your own breathing, and your own blood pulsing through your own veins.

The moment you realize something is wrong - terribly wrong - is the moment that the world disappears. Leaving you sitting in your chair in the middle of a flooded, ruined Mitakihara. Bodies, corpses everywhere, some facedown in the mud and muck, others looking up to the sky, their faces permanently frozen in horror. Not one of them whole - each one torn apart or dismembered to some extent.

The smell of rot - of decay - is sickeningly sweet, a scent that grows chokingly stronger when the scream erupts, loud enough to shake the sky.

"HOMURA-CHAN! HOMURA-CHAAAAAN! I'M GOING TO EAT YOU, HOMURA-CHAAAAAN!"

You blink to see Pinky - no, Faust - in the form that you encountered in Siberia, in the distance in front of you. A twisted, giant presence, with the stark face of a dying sun, a grin full of too many teeth, and eyes blackened with too many secrets and too many lies. A piece of toast pierced on one of her many incisors. Her claws are no longer playful, pointy tips to her gloved fingers - they are now scythes, each the length of your arm, dripping with blood and gore, gnarled where they sprouted out from arthritic knuckles. A blue schoolbag dangling from a shoulder with too many joints.

Her back hunched over, vertebrae jutting out from her back, terrible wings of black bone sprouting from her shoulderblades. An angel, imagined by demons who fed on despair.

Without warning, without preamble - the monster that was once Pinky charges you. Loping at you, its clawed feet tearing through the ground, its scythed fingers slicing air. Its maw blooming open, exposing its forest of ivory teeth, each one stringy with pink saliva.

"HOMURA-CHAAAAN!"

You have the sneaking suspicion that this has happened before.

What do you do?

[]Wait and see what happens.
[]Stare Pinky down in frosty silence.
[]Get out of timestop. Nope.

The thing is; Pinky can pull us into timestop.

And, she can just as easily rip us to bits in it, too.

Of the several times we've seen her in similar states, there was one time where she was actually properly mad at us that she pulled us into timestop, and she didn't kill us there, either.

tl;dr if Pinky wanted us to die, we'd be trapped in timestop and shortly after dead.

Now, if we MAKE her mad in timestop, then all bets are off (mutant cats are not a good idea).

You narrow your eyes at the charging eldritchian horror. Sure, seeing her in this form chilled your blood and made the hairs at the back of your neck stand on end - but there is no reason for her to behave like this, not when the simple reason you're coming here is to keep a promise you made to her. Yes, you've got a lot to answer for, you've committed some horrific sin that made her this way - but you are not someone to be pushed around like this.

Besides, who the fuck menaces someone with a slice of toast and a schoolbag?

It's with a frosty silence, then, that you stare her down. Looking completely unamused at her antics. To her credit, Pinky doesn't seem to notice, continuing her near-suicidal charge straight at you, clawed arms flailing as she screamed your former name again and again. "HOMURA-CHAAAAN! HOMURA-CHAAAAAN, I'M GOING TO--UWAH!"

...Uwah?

There's a small noise of a stone being knocked loose, and the towering behemoth seems to trip - slamming facefirst into the ground with an impact reserved for a whale being introduced to a new friend by way of terminal velocity. The very moment it happened, the ruined landscape of Mitakihara disappeared, reverting back to the grayscale normality of your new apartment. Midori still sleeping, frozen in time, on your couch.

And Pinky on her face, on the floor, just a few inches from your feet. In what looks like a Mitakihara Middle School uniform, with the cream blouse, green striped skirt and stockings. ...Her skirt's flipped up during the nonsense, giving you a peek of...of...

You turn away just as she groans, sitting back on her legs. Rubbing her nose from behind an oversized mask of a snarling, black-eyed sun with teeth.

You refrain from commenting on her underwear, and instead get directly to the matter at hand. You brought her pancakes.

"A-ah? You...you did? Pancakes?" Pinky gets back up on her feet, patting her blouse and skirt down with an almost cat-like fastidiousness. "...So that was what I smelled. I thought for a moment you'd brought someone else in her with you, Homura-chan!" She stands in front of you, hands on hips. "If you really did that, then I'll be very angry at you, you know!"

...Is that the reason she pulled this thing with the mask? This...nearly giving you a heart attack?

"Mask? Oh, you mean this!" She slides the mask back over her face, and leans forward, clawed hands reaching for the air. "BOOGA BOOGA BOOGA! Ahahaha!" Pinky finally takes the dreadful thing off and lets it disappear in a small puff of pink smoke, giggling all the while. "No, not really! I knew you were alone before I did it!"

Then...why?

"Well, um..." It's here that she looks down, seemingly almost bashful about this. "Well, you just looked really unhappy the last time you visited, and...and I wasn't very nice to you then! So I thought I'd cheer you up a bit!" The pink-haired horror in the school uniform looks up at you and beams.

. . .She was trying to cheer you up? Really?

"Of course! What did it look like I was trying to do, actually eat you? Stupid Homura-chan, I wouldn't eat someone like you! You'd probably be much too bitter to even nibble on!" Pinky sticks her tongue out at you. "But...yes, I was trying to cheer you up, and...it doesn't look like it worked, though, sorry..."

What do you do now?

[]Pat your lap. Never mind that. Time to feed your Eldritchian Horror some pancakes.

What then?
You know how Kaname Madoka was. She would have all of Eternity to spend alone thinking about how many people and magical girls got killed because of her and Homura.

Do you think she really deserves such a wretched fate?

You wave the matter away. It's the thought that counts - most of the time, anyway. You pat your lap instead, and take the now-cooled plate of pancakes from your side table, color returning to the dish as time resumes to affect it. It's time for you to keep your promise, and you aim to do so while you've still got time to.

"Eh? But..." Pinky seems to crimson at this. "Is...is it alright, Homura-chan? I mean, even back then, we didn't--"

Then is then and now is now. It's fine, you tell her.

"Well, if...if Homura-chan says so, then..." The pink-haired horror murmurs, suddenly seemingly so unsure of herself for a few moments - before suddenly grinning and jumping right onto your lap with a solid whumpf, very nearly knocking the wind out of you. Her legs ending up draped over an armrest while she leaned back on the other, almost reclining across your thighs.

...Not the sort of position you were expecting, but you suppose this will do. It's a good thing she doesn't seem to weigh anything at all.

"Of course I don't! I'm...I'm very lithe, and I don't eat a lot! Hmph!" Pinky puffs her cheeks out at you, turning away a bit huffily. You shake your head at this, and calmly begin to cut the remaining pancakes into small pieces, pieces easy enough to skewer with a fork. After a few moments, you lower the first forkful towards Pinky's mouth, which obligingly opens with an almost cute-sounding exhalation. ...It would have been cute, really, if not for the fact that all her teeth seemed to be filed into points.

Despite this, the first forkful is delivered without any trouble. The fork even survived the journey, and Pinky seems to grow thoughtful as she chews. A pensive grunt escapes her lips as she swallows, brow furrowing in concentration.

A few moments more, and her sunless eyes open wide. Something in them gleaming, shining.

"Uwah! That...that means..." It's then that she frowns. "Aw, jeez! That means she likes you more than she liked me, Homura-chan! The ones she made me never tasted like that!" She shakes her head, ponytails flapping. "They were good, but not this good! Ah, another, please!"

Prose Magica

My pastebin: http://pastebin.com/u/Grizzlyniisan

Rain pounded outside. Odette quietly walked through the musty apartment hall, side-by-side with her companion, Lotte Laufson. It was the first time they'd had a chance to work together in too many months. The last time Odette could remember them actually working with each other was some job in Niagara Falls. Something about a nutjob magical girl holing up in one of the seven million haunted houses on Clifton Hill. Therese had refused to come along, inexplicably falling ill the day they were supposed to go. Afterward, the Eversor and Callidus pair ended up going on the closest thing to date either of them had ever been on. Deep down, Odette still wanted to go on the ferris wheel again some day.

Odette nodded without a word.

The apartment was old and dingy, not entirely like the former warmaster's own building. The hall carpet was a dull, pinkish-brown mess while the walls clashed with a bright green. Lining the walls were cigarette smoke stained sconces that really looked as though they ought to flicker every now and then.

"What's up?" The Callidus asked, looking more than a little concerned.

Odette made a slight questioning grunt and cocked an eyebrow.

"You've got that look," Lotte chuckled. "You get it when you're thinking too hard. I'd know it anywhere."

True, Odette was thinking too hard about some things. She had a strange feeling in her gut, as if she were changing somehow. One moment she was grumpy and brooding, the next she felt as if she could snatch the cap from Therese's head and become warmaster again. Some thing, however, weren't worth getting off her chest.

"Suit yourself," Lotte shrugged, laughing to herself. "But if you were really fine, you'd have made some kind of remark."

"Don't worry your pretty little head about it."

"Good enough."

Question that came up at the very end of last thread:
>So. A hundred long, awesome, content-filled threads. People lining up to do artwork and writing and contribute their own little pieces of the universe you've built. Crowds of fans just waiting for the next thread. How does it feel to be this awesome, Decu?

>> ☐ Prose Magica: The Ballad of the Seventeenth Part 8 archivalfag 06/09/13(Sun)13:10 No.25341846

Soon enough, the two reached the end of the hall and stopped in front of room 306, the residence of a one Fennel Vance. All in all, it looked like any other room in the building, save a missing screw in the six, making it fall over to make a nine.

"I don't really know what I was expecting," the Callidus mumbled as they approached their destination, "but I'm a little disappointed."

The one-eyed girl glanced up at her partner in crime, scowling, and muttered a simple, "What?"

"Was hoping for a shabby, crack den looking place, I guess," Lotte replied.

Odette rolled her eye and raised her foot to kick in the door, only be shoved out of the way by the blonde. The silver-haired girl scowled harder, letting her face do all the talking. Her partner, however, would have none of it. In a flash, she donned her magical girl costume - a black leather skin-tight suit with a zipper that went down just the right length. Newly transformed, the Callidus clapped her hands together and then - in a display of magic and showmanship - spread them, conjuring a leather bandolier out of thing air like an accordian, filled with every thief's tool imaginable.

"I love doing that," she cried, grinning from ear to ear. "Let's do this nice and clean, shall we?"

Odette shrugged and mumbled something about making it quick as she leaned against the wall. The Callidus' work was quick and efficient; in mere moments there was a loud clunk of tumblers as the door unlocked. Lotte looked up at the other girl and made an indecipherable head gesture. Odette simply looked confused and blinked a few times in response, shaking her head.

"Make with the sparkles," the blonde mumbled.

"What?"

"What if she's in there?" Lotte asked, standing up again. "You're not gonna suit up?"

"You know I hate doing that," Odette pouted, turning a shade pinker.

"Oh come on! No one's here!"

"Happy?" She groaned.

Lotte smirked and nodded. "Shy Odette is good too. Let's do this."

The shorter girl nodded silently. Taking her cue, Lotte turned the knob with great caution and delicacy, careful to make as little sound as possible. As soon as the doorway was clear enough, the pair slipped in like ghosts. Much of the apartment was left in disarray, as if the girl had been in a hurry to leave. Drawers were left out, shelves cleared and their contents strewn about on the ground. Odette was suddenly reminded of her own apartment after it had been broken into.

"I'll look around here," Lotte said as she scanned the room, "you check the bedroom. If there's anything good, it'll probably be there."

Odette nodded and took off at a brisk pace for the other room. The apartment was a fair size; the only rooms were the living room, bedroom and bathroom. The bedroom was left in the same state as the rest of the apartment - the bedside table's drawer was pulled out and it's contents dumped, clothes were thrown from the open closet, even the bedsheets were pulled up and the mattress not set on the frame properly. The one-eyed girl had to wonder what Fennel could have been looking for that was so important.

As she stepped over the objects on the floor, something caught Odette's eye. On the bedside table was a manila folder, printed with a large stylized seventeen in the corner. Fennel's last assignment. It looked almost as if it were left for Odette to find, sitting out in the open like that. Odette took a seat on the bed and flipped it open.

>> ☐ Prose Magica: The Ballad of the Seventeenth Part 8 archivalfag 06/09/13(Sun)13:11 No.25341859

Sure enough, it was a termination order - Fennel's speciality. But as she read further, Odette's blood ran cold. Her eyes shot open and she nearly bit her lip hard enough to draw blood. The room temperature plunged and the bedroom window crackled as frost began to grow inward from the edges. Odette wished there was some kind of mistake, but there it was in front of her eyes, signed by the Seventeenth incubator himself, dated for three weeks previous. It looked as though the assignment was given out the day before Fennel went missing. Had it tipped her over the edge?

Odette quickly pulled her arms back under her cloak, bringing the folder with them. The frost receded from the window as she nodded and answered with a quick, "Yeah, I'm fine."

The Callidus looked around the room. "If you say so," she muttered, not entirely believing the other girl. "Found anything yet?"

Odette shook her head. "Not yet. You?"

"Looks like she cleaned the place out good," Lotte replied, leaning against the doorframe. "Makes sense, really. She was a pro. You know I worked a job with her once?"

"Seriously?" The one-eyed girl asked, suddenly curious.

"Yeah, just remembered when we were coming here. Couple years back we went after some druglord together. Pretty standard stuff."

Odette nodded and made a quiet "hmph" noise. "So what was she like?"

Lotte shrugged as she tried to put her thoughts into words. "She was... a weird one. Not really like psycho-weird, but she just didn't take anything seriously. Always laughing and joking. The type that'd make some corny pun about 'getting ahead of yourself' while she chopped it off. I get that you have to be a few cards short to do her kind of work but," the blonde took a deep breath and seemed settle down a bit, "I guess she was okay. Had a way of rubbing off on you. By the end of it, I was laughing right along with her."

Odetted snickered. "Weirdo."

"Yeah, yeah," the Callidus laughed. "Like you're one to talk."

"Haven't had a good fight in a while," the one-eyed girl replied. "Hell, this the first time I've worn my costume since I got the boot."

"Well, you ever want that hat back, you come talk to me," Lotte said, a dangerous glint in her eyes. "The offer's always open."

Odette's thoughts flashed back to the folder. The deal offered by the Callidus and her enigmatic friend suddenly looked far more appealing. She tossed the idea around in her head a number of times, weighing the options. Finally she mumbled a short and simply, "I'll think about it."

Lotte's eyes narrowed as her lips curled at the tips, a devilish grin if Odette had ever saw one. She could tell what the Callidus was thinking. She could see that smug statisfaction in her eyes as the former warmaster started to come about.

Odette shook her head and pulled herself up. "Whatever. Let's go pick up the kids."

As the pair left the apartment, the one-eyed girl could swear she heard muffled, tinkling laughter mixed in with the rain. Somewhere, she thought, a girl in a black baseball cap was thinking over her options.

Odette stared out the window of a Tim Hortons, one hand firmly clutched around a hot chocolate while Lotte rested her around the one-eyed girl's shoulders. Across from them sat Meg and Mona, the former nursing a tea and munching on a Dutchie while the latter occassionally sipped at her coffee. It seemed as though Meg had finally gotten used to the presence of her idol after actually trying to start a conversation with her. Mona simply sat back and absorbed Lotte's tall tales with a skeptical eye. She couldn't bring herself to believe the one about the Nineth warmaster's birthday bash, despite Odette assuring her that every word was true.

Aside from Lotte's occasional proddings to verify the veracity of her stories, Odette kept silent for most of the meeting as she mulled over the day's events. She couldn't rightly deny that she was starting to change. Getting back into her groove.

"Hey, O," Lotte suddenly called out, leaning over to her, "didn't you beat the bartender at shots that one time?"

Odette blinked. "The Bartender bartender?"

"Once, I think," the one-eyed girl answered, "out of like a hundred times."

Noticing their looks, Lotte began to explain. "Either of you two ever been to Harrison's?"

They both shook their heads. "Been outside it, but never went in," Mona offered.

This is why it's always important to make your vote count, sometimes it's a close race. Pretend there's a propaganda poster here, except instead of "When you drive alone, you drive with Hitler", it's "When you don't vote, don't complain when we get someone else killed".

>> ☐ Prose Magica: The Ballad of the Seventeenth Part 8 archivalfag 06/09/13(Sun)13:13 No.25341884

"Right, so," the blonde began, hunching over the table. "There's two bartenders that work their. A blonde and a redhead. Both are former magical girls. We call the blonde 'The Russian' and the redhead 'The Bartender', even though they're both bartenders. They've got a thing going where if you can match them shot-for-shot, the whole night's drinks are on the house. Only one person's ever won, and you're sitting with her." Lotte punctuated the statement by giving Odette a light slap on the back. "Not even Valnikov could do it, ain't that right?"

"Yeah, cause she was up against The Russian," the one-eyed girl added. "Those two go way back."

"Brie?" Meg, the smaller of the Eversor pair, asked.

"The Seventeenth's first warmaster," the Callidus explained. "I didn't really know her that well, but Odette and her were tight. You want to tell this one?"

Odette sighed and turned her attention to the other occupants of the table. Reminiscing about Brie always did strange things to her emotions. On one hand, she couldn't resist telling a good story and didn't want to let the warmaster's memory die out. On the other, talking about her was like a knife in the gut. With reluctant resignation, she mumbled a quiet, "Ok," and sat back in her seat.

"Brie was my big sis," she explained, staring at her hot chocolate, trying her best to avoid eye-contact with anyone. "Figuratively, of course. She was the oldest of the group when they started the Officio system. The bartenders were from the same batch as her, but a few months later. She was beautiful and smart and kind. Everyone loved her. She had this platinum blonde hair that went on forever," Odette smiled and laughed to herself, "and she always wore a this black baseball cap with the warmaster's emblems on it instead of the regular cap."

"About three years ago a Wally finally got the better of her," the silver-haired girl continued, a tear coming to her single eye. "Half the officio resigned. A tenth witched out from grief," Odette took a shakey breath in a vain attempt to steel herself. "I had to pick up the pieces. They leave it to a sixteen year old girl to fix a broken officio and they wonder why we're so fucking weak."

"Odette, it's okay," Lotte whispered, pulling the other girl in tight. "You don't have to tell them if you don't want to."

But Odette simply shook her head and wiped the tears from her face. "Can't let people forget. No one forgets what happened three years ago. Not on my watch."

The black-haired Eversor nodded solemnly, then fumbled around in her pocket for a few moments before producing a small photograph. She gently slid it across the table to Odette. The one-eyed girl picked it up and took a good hard look at it. She'd managed to avoid focusing on it before, but for once she actually wanted to look at her old self. It seemed to be a picture from her inauguration. She still had both brilliant blue eyes, long silvery hair that went down to her waist and a black baseball cap atop her head, emblazoned with the warmaster's iconography.

"That's why you wore the hat, isn't it?" Meg asked quietly.

Odette nodded. She couldn't speak. She could feel the tears streaming down one side of her face. How could she let this happen to herself? At what point in those three years did she just stop caring? She tried to ask herself those questions, but deep down she knew. She knew when she'd lost herself. She knew when she'd stopped wearing that hat and cut her hair. Two years ago, a different Odette took her place.

After a few moments, she felt Lotte's arm tugging at her to get up. "Come on, O," she cooed softly. It was as close as Odette had ever heard the Callidus get to a motherly voice. "Let's go wait in the car until it's time to pick up Terry."

The crying girl nodded and got up, then motioned for Lotte to stay when she tried to follow. Alone, she left the restaurant and made for Sleepy Sue. She had a feeling a certain hat-wearing girl would be there waiting to laugh at her.

As they watched Odette leave with tears in her eyes, Meg turned back to the Callidus and asked, "But why did she stop wearing it?"

And that's a wrap. Anyone who follows me on twitter got this one a couple days early because I am chronologically impaired and posted it early.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 06/11/13(Tue)08:08 No.25374626

You are a Magical Girl, and you're currently feeding pancakes to an Eldritchian Horror sitting on your lap.

What's next? Tickle fights? Cuddling? Shopping for cute clothes together?

...Well, whatever it is, you can only hope that it doesn't involve your heart being torn right out from your chest and being crushed into pulp right in front of you. Before said pulp getting spiked into the ground like a flattened mushy football, in the touchdown zone of your own catastrophic failure to read the mood.

It's not something you'd like to have a repeat performance of, if you're to be completely honest with yourself.

You won't be the first to say it, but...perhaps you do have something to lose, after all.

But mostly you want to find out just what kind of shit you pulled, to deserve having an insane goddess of wrath and blood and skulls after you.

In any case, Pinky - said insane, bloodthirsty goddess who seems to be hell-bent on settling a vendetta with you - is currently sitting like a very satisfied cat on your lap. Grunting happily under her breath with every forkful of pancake you feed her. A couple of times you decided to pull that trick you did with Midori - where you feed the forkful of food to yourself at the last second - but something tells you that getting away without your fingers bitten off would be the best you could hope for, and thus you refrained from doing so.

Pinky had said something earlier, though. About...how Tomoe Mami had made her pancakes before, and how she seemed to be making your pancakes much more delectable than how she did it for the crazed goddess. You finally asked her when this happened - and the pink-haired girl fell silent for a few moments before replying.

"...I don't remember anymore." She says, her voice cheerful, almost sing-song. "Could be yesterday, or could be a couple of years back, or maybe it was an entirely different timeline altogether. I dunno~" She shakes her head for effect, her ponytails wagging from side to side. Slapping you in the face every so often.

...Alright, alright. You were just asking, after all.

She didn't...give Mami a Golden Weapon, though, by any chance?

"What?" Pinky blinks at this. "Wah, of course not! That'd be totally predictable of me, Homura-chan! What's the fun in that?" She grins at you, before poking your nose with a clawtip. "While it should be pretty interesting to have Homura-chan kill the people she likes, there's the chance someone heroically sacrifices themselves to save the day, and I~ hate~ that~! Much better if Homura-chan kills someone she can hate so much, that after the dust settles and the fallout clears, she figures out just how much of a monster she really is!"

Well. That's....great. Yeah. That's a relief.

What do you ask next?

It's not about Faust knowing she was originally Madoka, but that Madoka is still an active personality within Faust that is subtly working against her.

But asking about Malal wouldn't necessarily clue her in to Madoka being active, would it? Because we have Malal's old photo that she left in the servoskull box, not just the Barrier information (which I'm not sure we even have as Chiaki, unless Midori filled us in off-screen).

So you probably shouldn't be getting too attached to all of those nice girls I gave those scary weapons to, you know, or I might have to help out again!"

...Since you're here and you've got her as a sort of captive audience, you decide to ask her a few more questions. One of them being about...well, Malal. Pinky had referred to her before, as the girl who made everyone throw up around her by just being there. She'd also talked about the Culexus with no small amount of hate - which, when you factor in the little deal about the two of them being practically the same person, is kind of strange when you think about it.

"Eeehhh?" Pinky groans in mid-chew, her expression twisting to perfectly reflect someone who'd just suddenly bit into something alive and wriggling in their mouthful of food. "Why're you asking about that person, Homura-chan? Are you trying to ruin my appetite here?" She fidgets on top of your lap. "Gwaah, don't ruin the atmosphere, not when it's being so cosy and everything!"

It's just a question, you remind her. She shouldn't be so upset just because of one stupid question.

"Mrrr..." Pinky seems to be really playing up the lap cat act, here, by the way she's growling in her throat in irritation - the way lazy felines do when they see you winding up for a good kick. Or maybe that's just what she does before suddenly darting forward and tearing your own larynx out with her teeth? You're not all that sure.

"She wasn't a nice person," The eldritchian horror starts. "I tried making friends one time but she suddenly did this thing with her stupid suit and everything hurt and she told me to stay away from you AND SHE MADE ME REALLY ANGRY SO I MADE HER GONE!" Pinky's words, already hurried and strained, became a stream of half-shouted, half-screamed shrieking that shook the ground underneath you. "I was gonna give her a Golden Weapon too, but she didn't want it! And she always kept her suit activated whenever she was around you, so I couldn't even talk to you even if I wanted to!"

...Seems like Malal managed to even hide her real identity from even a crazed goddess herself. No small feat, but then again, if you could hide your identity from someone like Kharn despite being almost always together, well...

"I'm really proud of how I killed her, though," Pinky grins through bloody teeth. "It took a bit more time and patience than I'm used to having, but I did get her in the end!"

Yep. Few cards short of a deck.

Someday, you'll pay for everything you've done.

You have an inkling about how Pinky killed her, anyway. If Yuma was telling the truth, then she was killed by Walpurgisnacht herself. You don't know the exact details, but it sounds like something she'd pull. Something of a huge, impossibly cruel joke.

...You should be angry right now, really. Angry enough to smash the plate of pancakes right into her face, before flashing her the middle finger as you leapt out of your Time Stop. But what good would that do? What possible use would that be? All you'd do would be getting her angry yourself, and have your heart ripped out in the process. And the cycle - whatever cycle it was that had you forgetting everything about you - would resume again, or at least that's what you think would happen. Not a very desirable outcome, at that.

But it's not even that, what had sunk whatever's left of the dying embers of your fury in cold water. It's the fact that even if you blamed Pinky - this was still your fault. You did this. And you have to fix things.

And getting angry at Pinky is like getting angry at a senior citizen for getting old. It's...pointless, pitiful, and just a bit sad.

"Homura-chan?" You hear Pinky murmur. "Are...are you crying?"

...No. No, you're not.

You run your sleeves across your eyes, and shake your head. It's nothing, you tell her.

What about the Warmaster Cap, then? You bring this out of your inventory for her to get a look at, eager for a change of topic. What's in this hat that's gotten everyone acting weird whenever someone wears it--

"Oh! Oh, it's that hat, the one Kharn wears all the time!" Pinky giggles as she snatches it from your grasp, turning it over in her hands, examining it from every angle. "Hah, this old thing? I remember sealing something inside this, some sorta spirit of lust or something! Had a foreign name to it, too, starts with an S and ends with an ESSHHH!" She reaches up to jam it onto her head, adjusting it every so often. "Hee! How do I look, Homura-chan?"

. . .You very nearly kissed her.

YOU VERY NEARLY LEANED FORWARD AND KISSED A MOUTHFUL OF BLADES. FUCK.

HOW DO YOU REACT?

[]Tear the hat off her head and throw it back into your inventory.

Pretty sure we want this hat as far away from Pinky as is physically possible, and a pocket dimension is probably about as good as we're going to get.

That said, as appalling as the possibility of voluntarily running our face through the meat grinder that is her dental work is, making a sudden, mildly aggressive movement toward her is probably an equally bad idea, so we should probably move slowly, like we're defusing an inexplicably and disturbingly sexy bomb.

I'm on board for headpats afterward, though.

As for our actions, I think very, very slowly and calmly taking the hat and putting it back in our inventory is the way to go. Neither tearing it off her nor putting it on our own head are good ideas right this second - one will piss her off, and the other gets a mouthful of blades kissing us.

She's not a waifu. She's an abomination, a mistake our character has created out of selfish desire that has to be atoned for at some point or other, a being twisted into sadistic psycopathy who we're probably going to have to finally put down.

Feeding her pancakes in one of her more lucid moments and pacifying her with a light kiss on the forehead is hardly waifuism. It's giving the monster a moment's respite and a glimmer of happiness where we can, because noir's coming big time to fuck everything up.

That tidbit about Culexes is very very very interesting. It's a shame we basically inadvertantly got them all killed except for one, and then inadvertantly snubbed her.

You will yourself to stay calm - to stay in the fucking chair - and it's with a small smile that you tell Pinky that she looks...well, quite dashing with the hat. Of course, with her school uniform on, it just makes her look something like a rougish delinquent - which is really not her style. It's much more of yours, anyway.

"Really? Eeh...if Homura-chan says so, I guess..." Pinky says, allowing you to reach forward and take the hat back from her. You jam it back onto your own head, making the damnable thing out of her reach, albeit temporarily. "Hmm, it does fit you better, Homura-chan. It looks nice with that ponytail too...! Speaking of which, I've never seen you with one before!" It's here that she sits up on your lap, making you wince at her sudden movement, both her clawed hands taking hold of your cheeks. "...All the other Homura-chans either had long hair or braided pigtails, so boring! Now, you look like...like some old-fashioned samurai..!"

Despite the fact that you're a flinch away from getting your face ripped off, you feel your own cheeks burning at her compliments. ...You didn't really do this by yourself, you tell her. Mami helped a lot, you just picked it out of a few choices.

"OH? Well, that's Mami-chan for you," Pinky says happily, patting your cheeks. "Although, I did like the short hair you had. I mean, it was cute on its own right, and made Homura-chan look really boyish and tough. It was pretty different, too--"

It's around this time that you feel heat blossoming on your right arm - and you glance down at your shield, which is is nearly white-hot, the gears inside seemingly having ground themselves into nothing that it's practically running silent. "Oh! Looks like our time is up, Homura-chan!" Pinky giggles as she hops off of your lap, leaving you in your chair. "Visit me again like this, okay?"

What? That's...that's what it takes?! This stupid hat--

"See you!" Pinky leans forward and places a playful kiss on your cheek. You freeze at this - until you feel your Shield move. You look down again to see Pinky's fingers curled around the rim. "...And remember, don't get involved with any idols! I'll be watching you!"

A sudden thunderclap of metal crashing into metal, and time resumes once more. The color bleeding back into the world, leaving you behind with a kiss mark on your cheek and an empty plate of pancakes.

On your couch, Midori is faintly murmuring something about late manuscripts.

Well. That's...one thing squared away, you grumble as you tear the hat off and stuff it back into your inventory.

What do you do now?

I still think this could easily have been salvaged without the retcon by going "Hey, I figure it's been a while since you've had the pleasure of seeing this in person, so I brought you a present." and blowing QB away with a handgun.

QB gets visual confirmation of Pinky, Pinky gets some sadistic nostalgia, and WE get to blast that smug cat and actually have a justifiable reason for doing so for once. It's Win-Win-Win.

But it's a little late for that, and that's neither here nor there. No sense in stirring up this whole kettle of fish again.

Now I'm wondering what actually came first. If Kharn was always like the way she is causing Pinky to curse it as a joke or if it was actually the hat slowly corrupting her due to extended use. Wake Up Midori+Drop Off Golden Weapons: 9

Even after being told that keeping 4 Golden Weapons in our Inventory is a bad idea, 6 people still voted for it. Man, that's just depressing.

I'm not implying that it's bad, I'm explicitly saying that it's bad, and that the character thinks it's bad.
>something tells you that it's just inviting bad luck, to be carrying so many at one time.
That was Decu right there, giving us a hint that's it's bad.

While it's possible for a Golden Weapon to appear in our Inventory of its own volition, we don't have to make it any easier for it to do so.

That'd only account for half, though. The other three were well after people realized that dropping off the Golden Weapons is possible.

Even if they pop back, it may be better to still stay away from them until they make themselves needed. Pretend evil pinky vibes are like radiation. Even though we're destined to run into them anyway, it doesn't mean we need to just bathe in them constantly just because. It's all about taking reasonable measures to limit exposure just a bit.

You reach up to take your glasses off and pinch the bridge of your nose. Despite having woken up from a rather refreshing sleep, coming back from your encounter with Pinky had left you weary, exhausted, and in dire need for a smoke. Something to calm your frazzled nerves. ...You didn't know if it was staying in your time stop until your Shield very nearly gave out, or it was simply having to deal with the eldritchian horror, which was akin to walking a very thin tightrope over a spiky minefield - with a bomb strapped on to your back. Just the smallest mistake - even the mistake of hesitating for far too long - would turn out to be very bad for you.

You place your glasses back on, before levering yourself off of your seat with a tired grunt. Making your way towards Midori, feeling various aches and pains flare up with every movement.

...Might as well get ready for your breakfast with Kirishima Ruri, you decide. But first you have to wake Midori up and tell her what's up, so she doesn't wake up suddenly to an empty apartment with no explanation where you went. That'd be...inconsiderate.

As soon as you reach for Midori's shoulder do you notice that she's hugging something to her chest, underneath the blanket that Mami had probably draped on her. A quick peek, and...well, it's your carton of cigarettes, along with what suspiciously looks like Wendy Cooldown's pair of laminated panties.

...So that's where they went. You'd nearly forgotten about Wendy's skivvies, but the carton you could've figured out on your own.

You could only hope that Midori was tipsy when she did this, and wouldn't remember a thing about the panties. Having to explain them away would be...well. Complicated.

What do you do?

[]Take the carton and the panties, put back into inventory. Wake Midori up.
[]Take only the carton.
[]Pretend you didn't notice them at all, and wake Midori up.

That's what the vault is for. People don't tend to get golden weapons unless Pinky is directly trying to give them one, so it's not like ones already claimed by us will teleport directly to other strange people, so a heavily-guarded magical girl vault is a decent place to stash them.

~~It is possible that a really cunning or dangerous opponent could get them from the vault, but we're running that against the odds that having a bunch of golden weapons on us 24/7 won't slowly turn us into Venom.~~

It's with a careful hand, then, that you take the laminated panties from her grasp. If you're any judge, Midori probably got roaring drunk and decided to check you for cigarettes, finding the panties inadvertently. She then held on to it, in order to ask you about it when she woke up. 'Course, such a thing happening would be decidedly awkward, even if you were to tell the truth that this was Kharn's fault to begin with.

You leave the carton with her, though. You can just buy some more, outside. ...Or maybe give the smoke-free thing a shot, which you think you'll fail after being within walking distance to the nearest convenience store. Yeah, maybe you'll try.

Slipping the panties back into your inventory, it's then that you wake Midori up, shaking her gently by her shoulder. She mumbles something about five more minutes, and you take that cue to shake her a bit harder. It's only after a few more moments of these, as well as calling her name, that she finally wakes up.

"Gwuh...where...where am I? S-sempai...?" Midori's crimson eyes blearily blink up at you, squinting. "It's...w-what time is it? Oh...oh no, I'm late for something, aren't I? I--" She starts to sit up, slowly but surely gaining acceleration as well as incremental levels of panic.

You shake your head and give her a comforting squeeze on her shoulder. No, she's not late for anything - in fact, it's pretty early. You just wanted to wake her up to make sure she knows where you're going.

"O-oh. Oh, it's that...it's that mission with...that idol, isn't it, Sempai?" The green-haired Callidus rubs at her eyes, before focusing back on you. "Yes, Sakura-san told me. It...well, pardon me for saying so, sempai, but it doesn't sound like your type of mission. I mean, as Warmaster, and everything."

>>25376602

Well, it's what you got, and you were asked for specifically. Besides, you'd like to see what the big deal is about this idol, and see what she wants from you.

"Just take care, sempai, alright?" Midori seems to have fully woken up now. "And...and please don't hesitate to call on us if you need us, sempai. You'll be gone for four days and everything, right?"

...She's overreacting. You'll be gone for four days, yes, but it's still in Mitakihara. And you'll probably drop by the Officio if you get the chance. And besides, she's got her own mission with Kyoko.

"Still, sempai. Sayaka-san and Mami-san will be available, in any case. And..." Midori seems to steel herself, here. "If sempai needs me specifically, I'll...I'll drop everything and go!"

You narrow your eyes at her, before tapping at her forehead with a finger. That's deserting her assignment, and not something Kyuubey takes lightly. Besides, Kyoko would be left alone, and you'd bring down Sayaka on both your heads as well.

"A-ah, I...I guess so..." The green-haired girl says, nodding. "Um, well, just keep it in mind, sempai. I'm always here for you."

Alright, alright, you get it. You give her hair a thorough ruffling. You'll keep it in mind, you promise. ...Ah, but what's this? What's the strange bulge under her blanket? Surely she's not hiding something from you, is she?

At this, Midori goes beet red. "U-um, well, I...er..." She sheepishly lifts the blanket, to show you the carton of cigarettes she'd hid there. You make a show of being surprised - which, to you, a little raising of the eyebrows is enough - but you nearly fail keeping your expression straight as she suddenly looks panicked. "W-wait, where's the p--er, um..."

...Is something wrong?

Midori squeaks at your question. "O-oh, um, no, sempai. Just that, urm, I thought....I thought something was missing but I guess I just dreamed it, hahaha." She makes a show of surreptitiously patting the cushions she's sleeping on. "S-see? Nothing, really! But, um, yes, I did...take these, sempai, from your inventory." She holds the carton of cigarettes to you. "I...I guess you'd like it back now?"

You look at the offered carton, before shaking your head and turning away. Nah, it's fine. You probably need to cut down anyway. She should hide it from you, or throw it away.

"...Really?" Midori squeaks again, seemingly unable to believe what she's hearing. "You're...you're serious, sempai?"

Deadly serious, you smile at her, before patting her head again and making for your room - where the bath is. For now, you'll just take a shower and head to the Officio for some business you need to take care of, before heading to your mission proper. You leave her with your keycard, and tell her to lock up before she leaves.

You couldn't help but chuckle at her gratitude. You shake your head, give her head another ruffle, and leave her to catch up on her rest.

She pulled you out of a living nightmare, after all.

From the moment I woke up, I knew the day'd be unusual. Slept alright, maybe for too long. Felt pretty good – something that had become more common, lately. More strange, though, was that there was nothing in particular I had to do. Took a shower. Ate breakfast. Checked my email. …Nothing. No crises. Miss Marigold didn't need me for anything. Annie and Mary were out on a mission together. Eightball didn't have anything for me, either. Ended up lying in bed, staring at the ceiling for half an hour and enjoying the peace of it all, before getting up to get a little painting done.

Used to be something I did a lot, when I was a kid. …And when I was lucid, back in the Center. Wrote about my dreams and painted what I saw. Just picked up a brush again, recently. Since things finally started to get better. Didn't find a whole lot of time for it, but bit by bit I managed to get it down on canvas. Mostly the good parts of my dreams. …Sometimes the shitty parts, too. Just to get them out there. An echo of advice from another life, I guess.

I figured I'd be able to put a few hours into the piece I'd been working on – a pink sea, full of spiral shells - but I barely got to work before my phone started to buzz.

The timing was something else. Almost made me think my room was bugged, but given who it was, it seemed unlikely. She'd probably say knowing everything about the enemy takes the fun out of it. Or she'd just make fun of me for having checker-patterned underwear. Didn't matter, though – hadn't really made any plans aside from sitting down and painting for a while. …Wasn't sure I liked how she insisted that just meant I wasn't doing anything, then, but her enthusiasm was a little contagious, and I agreed meeting up would be a good way to kill an afternoon.

It'd been a while since Nico and I got together. We both kept busy – preferred it that way. She always had people to kill – no, people to fight. That's how she liked to think of it. Hunting down big targets and seeing if they could kill her. …None of them had yet. Not even us. Wasn't much different for me, though, even if the targets weren't the same. Witches. Traitors. The occasional unlucky son of a bitch that made the wrong enemies. Failing all that, there was always paperwork to do. Joys of being a Warmaster's aide.

Barely got out the door before I saw her – didn't look like she would have taken 'no' for an answer, if she was already out here waiting. Not that she was ever the type. She was leaning against her bike – a hunk of sleek, custom-made German engineering that not only went several hundred miles per hour if pushed, but also made the rider look like a huge asshole. Saw a twitch of silver in her hand as the door shut behind me, and her arm flicked toward me. It was a movement well beyond what a normal human was capable of, at least without years of training, and a shitload faster than a lot of magical girls I knew.

Nothing new, from her. My hand snapped out, half-reflex, half conscious decision, and I caught it an inch from my face – a cleaver, one of probably three she had on her person, if I guessed right. Heavier than my knife and polished to a mirror sheen, with the handle pierced with a ring. …She liked to spin her knives around on her fingers when she was bored. If I'd taken a second to look, she'd probably have another one out and spinning already.

Didn't, though. Followed up on my catch with one smooth movement. Over my head in quick half-circle, then a flick of my wrist – different weight than mine, sure, but it wasn't unfamiliar to me. She braced to catch it, letting out a giggle that abruptly stopped when my throw met its mark – the fat rear tire of her asshole-cycle.

"...Ass!" It took her a second to sputter out a reply before she yanked the cleaver out of the rapidly-deflating tire, then gave it a quick spin before tucking it into her blazer. "I know the idea of a joke is foreign to you, Wendy, but you don't have to be a dick about it." Couldn't help but laugh, and after a little pouting, she joined in. This was what passed for a joke now; probably should have been something that bothered me more, but it was better than a moonlit tea party in a sea of corpses. Which was about as fun as it sounds. Second time wasn't much better, either, trust me.

Didn’t take long to fix her tire, but that didn’t stop her bitching as we rode, even though she had to yell to be heard over the purring of her bike. We didn’t really have a plan; she just told me to get on, and I held on tight as she drove way too fucking fast to wherever she wanted to go. The whole world was a sea of yellow as I buried my face in her back, in her long, blonde ponytail. She hadn’t cut it since we were kids, she told me. Aside from getting rid of split ends, or something. …The pang of nostalgia made the rest of the trip a little less gut-wrenching.

Up until we screeched to a stop a few feet from a stunt ramp that would have catapulted us directly into the waste dump that was the ocean. Iron Claw Point. Mostly good for crappy pier food and spitting on people down on the beach. She’d given me some shit line about testing your courage or something, last time we’d hung out here, but that was retarded. Nico got that way when she was in a good mood – completely retarded. ...Despite my better judgment, that was a little contagious, too.

We got some ice cream at the pier, then leaned on the railing, looking out at the beach. Talked about nothing for a while, about the normal parts of our lives, or what passed for them. She was a senior this year, but mostly because the school didn’t want to lose her parents’ generous donations. Didn’t bother going, since it usually just meant the place would get wrecked when someone showed up to get revenge for ‘some dead fuckwad or another’, or when someone got eager to try and prove they were hot shit in the assassination business. The city was running dry, she said. Hadn’t been anyone worth taking on since the Rabbits, and we had an agreement there.

Me, I’d gotten a promotion recently, which we agreed was pretty much meaningless. ‘Callidus Prima’. Supposed to be a ceremonial thing, but it was another stack of responsibilities for a little more money I didn’t need, and it earned me the resentment of just about every other Callidus in the Officio. …Pretty sure it was just a way to con me into paperwork and training the new blood, under the guise of grooming me to be the next Warmaster, or something. Annie and Mary got the same treatment, but they were the Rank Leaders already. It wasn’t anything new for them.

“You sound so surprised that you’re being jerked around,” Nico added coolly, once I was done bitching. She never quite forgave Eightball…no, never quite forgave the Officio for recruiting me. Told her again and again that my life was better now, but she insisted it was the same thing as luring a kid into a van with candy and then driving it into the ocean, and it’d only gotten worse since she found out another friend of hers contracted with the Ninth, back in Varrigan.

…Maybe it was for the best, though. Didn’t need her to change her mind – kept her from getting it in her head that she should make a contract. World wasn’t ready for Magical Nico, the Holy Sword of Santa Destroy, or some shit like that.

“Want to do it?” We’d talked about nothing for a while. Long enough for ice cream. For the crappy steak we split at Eat My Beef to settle. All afternoon, I guess, though the time flew by pretty quickly. …She cut me off mid-sentence with her question, accompanied by a manic grin.

…Asked her if she meant right here. In front of everyone. Right now.

“Absolutely. Come on, we hardly get a chance to anymore.” Her face pressed in close, and I could smell the steak sauce from earlier on her breath. Her hand squeezed mine, and I felt my face burn hot. …Stared right into her eyes – one a vivid blue, the other fractured, fragments of the same blue on the edge of a black abyss. My heart raced, and I mumbled the only thing I could think of.

…Thought you liked it better with the lights off.

“It’s hardly fair if you accommodate me all the time, Wendy.” …The one moment seemed to last an eternity. Then, I was shoved away, and nearly faster than I could react, a silvery cleaver was hurtling toward the pearl clipped to my scarf. …It was a wide swing. Pretty typical of Nico – if she used a weapon she could stab with, she might have scratched it. As it was, I ducked in and brushed her arm aside with mine and focused my energy into a gut-shot.

She tensed her stomach to absorb the hit, but she'd be feeling it for a week, at least. Realized a little too late what she was doing, just taking it like that - I felt her hands on my shoulders for just a split second before she shoved my head downward for an abrupt meeting with her knee. Didn't waste any time as I staggered back, either – I was only off-balance for a split second, but in that time, her arms slipped around my waist, and the whole world flipped upside-down as she swung me over her head and slammed me into the pavement.

Might have been enough to knock the wind out of a normal human, but it wasn't enough to leave a mark on me, and she knew that. With half a thought, I called up my knife, and I stabbed toward her shoulder as she was letting me go. Got nothing but air, though, and I narrowly rolled forward as she recovered, taking a swing at my soul gem again. …Wasn't fucking around today. She must have been more hard-up for a challenge than I'd thought.

It was like fighting a wild animal, once Nico got going. I barely got the chance to stand before I met an endless barrage of wild, powerful slashes, each one of them nearly enough to send my knife spiraling away. Any kitchen knife but that one would be in pieces in a matter of seconds, and even mine chipped a little as I narrowly deflected blow after blow. She'd pulled a second knife on me, and it was all I could do to push her other arm away without getting a cleaver stuck in mine.

...This would be easier if I could just kill her. Shouldn't think that way, but it was true. She sure as hell wasn't holding back.

I almost didn't notice in time when one of her cleavers had been spun away. She was tired of pushing against my defense. Or she knew she'd tire out before I did. Either way, what should have been a wild swing was a calculated grab, her arm reaching for mine as I moved to block. …No dice. I snapped my hand back and snagged her wrist. Tossed my knife the moment I knew I'd managed it – nice as it would be to just ram it into her shoulder joint and end this retarded contest completely – and snagged her shoulder.

She wasn't dumb, but for a moment she seemed confused; I didn't usually pull this kind of crap with her. It was all I needed. I leapt. Twisted in the air, and squeezed her arm between my legs. She dug her cleaver into my hip as I swung my leg around, but there was nothing she could do now as my calf connected with the side of her head and sent her toppling down to the ground, her head hitting the concrete with an audible 'thunk'.

Didn't fuck around once she was down. It wasn't kind, and it wasn't pretty, but I yanked on that arm as hard as I could. As hard as I could, anyway, without ripping it out. She hissed out a litany of fucks as her elbow popped, then her shoulder. Her cleaver dug into into my thigh twice, three times while I pulled, until I kicked her arm away and rolled off of her.

As always, she was quick to get back on her feet, but most of the bloodthirst had left her eyes as she tried to move her arm. …Told her it probably wasn't a good idea, but she just glowered.

"That's fucking right. You never used to be so afraid of hurting me." She looked…hurt, and it made my heart ache. Told her the truth upfront: I'd be pretty upset if she died, and I sure as shit wasn't going to be the one to do it during a sparring match. …Well, it was half the truth, but I wasn't dumb enough to say that. No matter how the fight went, she'd sit and stew on it. If I won, she'd decide she was weak and kill herself trying to get stronger. If I lost, she'd think I threw the fight and fixate on taking me down. She still hadn't gotten over Kilgore, and that was a lot less personal than this.

"...I don't mind if it's you, you know. It would feel like it was worth it." Her icy glare melted, and she tucked her cleaver away to rub at her arm. "Full-circle, really. Best sort of closure a girl could hope for."

…That was pretty gay.

Figured I'd wait until after thread to answer this.

The image is a Photoshop. I put that image together during the Misaka Vodka Victory Party Episode an age ago, back when I still posted as just '百式'.

The original image of Misaka had her hanging drunkenly off of an annoyed Accelerator. (Imagine my surprise when he showed up in the quest later on).

The original image of Homura was much the same as you see it there, I just edited it to allow for Misaka to hang off of her.

There are no intentional shenanigans going on in the background. I didn't remember to auto level it, though, so I imagine the color balance between the whites is off.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You are a Magical Girl, and you're on your way to a security job.

It's not a job you're looking forward to. The principal is some super-popular idol named Kirishima Ruri, who seemed to have enough pull and money to get even the mutant cat to bend over backwards for her. Sending his Warmaster, of all the girls in his payroll, to specifically be her lackey for nearly half a week.

Idols. Japan's most dubious export, besides strange pornography and cartoons.

Personally, you're not a fan, and your experience with them isn't improving your opinion of them much.

>>25467444

Now, you're not all that familiar with Incubator biology - besides scattering it all over the place with a well-placed gunshot or two) - but you're pretty sure that Kyuubey doesn't have any equipment between those legs of his. Or anything, really, that would qualify as something Kirishima Ruri may have had in her mouth to get this sort of preferential treatment. So that begs the question - just how much clout does this Kirishima Ruri have, and what's in it for the mutant cat?

Things used to be much simpler before all this.

You'd just have to show up and shoot someone's legs off and that'd be that, call it a day, meet up back in Charles' bar.

Well, you're not being paranoid for nothing. It's unprecedented, this client ordering the mutant cat around. Even with your leaky sieve of a memory, you remember Kyuubey as being one of those Incubators that absolutely hates having to cater to a client, valuing being able to make his own decisions rather than have them made for him. And this Ruri did just that - asking that you, from all the Magical Girls in your Officio, to be her security detail for four days.

Considering your current rank, and everything. No, you're still not used to being Warmaster, and you still have a lot to learn about the position - but you're pretty sure it's not something to take lightly. A Warmaster shouldn't be doing grunt work, and if she is, it'd have to be pretty fucking important.

It's only one of the many things that has you on edge, in regards with this particular job. One of the many things that's got you on guard with whoever this Kirishima Ruri is.

...You almost find yourself wishing that she'd come out holding a Golden Weapon right off the bat. That would just save you a whole lot of trouble - not to mention four days of babysitting.

We are going to be around idols for 4 days, plus a crazy stalker idol. Yeah, you did. You left Kharn's babies - that is to say, Gorefather and Gorechild, the chainaxes - and Muramasa behind. You don't see the need for that kind of hardware in this kind of mission, and you REALLY don't see the point of risking going stab-happy with Kirika's old standby. You even tried unsheathing the damn thing just a bit, to see the blade's golden surface - but seeing Kirika's screaming face, her eyes torn out and crying bloody tears in place of your own reflection made you think twice.

Even in death - or at least, having her soul trapped in a demonic weapon - Kirika still refuses to stop being such a bitch.

The Golden Desert Eagle, though, you made sure to keep. You're carrying it now, in a shoulder leather holster, the same holster you used during the last mission you had with Iori. Concealed rather well under the bulky bomber jacket that Kyoko's returned to you, it's a comforting weight on your side. ...You know these things are dangerous, but you can't help but feel oddly peaceful with it around. You're not even stressed at all about wearing the Warmaster's Cap, which, according to pinky, has some sort of malevolent spirit of lust inside it.

As for the Gauntlets, you're wearing them now still, in their braceleft forms. Each one clasped around your wrist, under your costume's sleeves. ...You haven't really taken them off since you got home from Siberia, haven't you? Maybe that's the reason Yuu's been so friendly. Does the skin contact count as constant skinship, or something?

...Nah. Golden Weapons couldn't work that way. Could they?

In any case. You met up with Sayaka, Kyoko and Mami in the Office on your way out. Mami greeted you with her usual smile, Kyoko with her usual grin, and Sayaka with her usual scowl that wished you were dead and buried a long time ago. Mami seemed proud that you'd taken it upon yourself to return to a life of hygiene, but as usual she couldn't help but make a fuss, retying your ponytail and making sure your costume's 'clean'. Kyoko seemed amused at this as always, while you saw Sayaka frowning harder and harder during this display. The blonde also gave you a rather thin file about Kirishima Ruri, to read on the way.

As Mami left the office - along with her none-too-subtle security detail, all of whom hesitatingly saluted you one by one, each of them blushing as they skittered past - you then told Kyoko about the package you received the other day. The red-haired Eversor's cheerful grin faded as you told her what it contained, and how you think it may be a possible lead on her own assignment. She thanked you for the heads up, and went off on her own. You also made her promise, again, not to set Midori on fire as a diversionary tactic. All you got was a guffaw.

For Sayaka, well. She didn't seem to be doing anything, then, and you probably need a second pair of eyes during this entire thing. You asked her if she had anything on her docket - and she blinked at you before saying something to the negative. Nothing but training the FNGs, she replied.

Did you take Sayaka along for the mission?

[]Yes.
[]No.

You brought Sayaka along with you. Of course, she protested at first, she grudgingly relented a few moments later, but not after going back to her office quarters for a moment and getting some stuff she said she needed.

...You're regretting that decision, however. The entire trip from the office had been nothing but her grumbling about how she's now trapped into spending four days tailing you and following you around. Worst mission ever, what a fucking waste of time, she'd prefer simply tossing her Soul Gem into a blender and putting the entire thing on puree than run a mission with you. Normally you'd be tuning her out - or just kicking her out of the car immediately, without having it stopped - but still, you couldn't help get a dig in.

Bcause really, all her bitching would be much more convincing if she wasn't dressed in rather casual clothes, carrying a lovingly-written placard proclaiming that 'RURI-CHAN IS THE BEST IDOL EVER' and wearing a baseball cap with the idol's winking face printed on the front and brim.

"...S-shut up, Murderface! I'm just a...a normal fan, that's all!" Sayaka spat, recoiling from you as you lazily tapped out a text message for Iori, greeting her good morning and telling her to take care during the concert.

A normal fan, she says. You're just having breakfast with her, she does know that, right? Concert isn't till tomorrow, or whenever it is. Why's she dressed like she's about to get in line, anyway?

"Surprise, surprise, Warmaster can't do any research on her own," Sayaka sneers. "If you'd only read that file Mami-san gave you, you'd know that they're holding an event right there in the Hotel she's staying. The Four-Day Date with Ruri-Chan Special! You get a lottery ticket after buying her latest album, and if your number gets picked, then you get to be with Ruri-chan for the entire four days she's here - including during the concert!"

That's...that's great, then. Whoever wins the damn thing you'll probably have to protect too. That's just perfect.

...Wait, does that mean--

"Of course!" Sayaka snaps, taking out her wallet from the pocket of her skirt and showing you what appears to be dozens of lottery tickets, all of them carefully arranged in ascending order and tied together with a rubberband. "As much as I could reasonably buy! Hah, I'll win that stupid lottery for sure!"

Y-yeah. Yeah, you think she would. You carefully inch a bit farther from Sayaka, who seems to be on fire in a way you've never seen her before. It's a bit scary, but you guess even she can get enthusiastic about something sometime.

"Hunh. Yeah, yeah, I see how you're looking at me like that, Murderface." Sayaka narrows her eyes at you, crossing her arms over her chest. "Sure, yuk it up. Someone like you wouldn't understand." Blueberry shakes her head, in a decidedly haughty way that makes you want to punch her all of a sudden. "All her songs speak to the heart, she's written them herself - both the lyrics AND the music - and she's even starred in Hollywood movies, too! And a lot of her songs..." The blue-haired girl shakes her head, closing her eyes. "...they sound like they're written for Magical Girls, too...Magical girls in love! Not like that porn crap that everyone likes back in the office!"

Okay. Okay. She should calm down. You don't know shit about idols, or about Kirishima Ruri. You're just calling for peace, now, before something happens.

"Fuck you, this is why I hate being around you. Christ."

Likewise.

"Hah!"

You ask about what Sayaka knows about Ruri, then, if she's such an appreciative fan. While doing this, you leaf through the rather sparse file that Mami's provided you. It's...well, the information printed within is barebones, something you'd probably find with just a casual Google search of the idol. Stuff like birthday, height, weight(censored, of course), likes and dislikes, favorite food, three sizes...stuff that Sayaka had also began parroting even before you'd finished posing the question.

"Her birthday's on August 31, she likes singing and dancing, her favorite food is ice cream, her three sizes are...uh, well, I'm not too sure about that, but who really cares--"

Not that kind of information, you say as you cut her off. The different kind. What's she like? What's her history?

"I was just getting to that, fuck's sake." Sayaka frowns, shaking her head. "Fine. Let's see...Ruri-chan's been singing as a kid, pageants and competitions and all that. She got into the idol business around three, four years ago, with that huge idol group called The Sugar Angels. Out of all the idols in that group - around seventy of them - only she really stood out and became a success. She's now the flagship idol of 2020 Productions, which is probably the biggest production company beside 765."

Sayaka looks down on the placard on her lap, smoothing it out carefully. "Besides that, uh...there's nothing really that stands out. She's known around the whole world, and makes it a point to hold concerts as much as she can, in between albums. There's been the usual controversies, getting seen with this or that guy celebrity, etcetera...nothing too serious or actually true." It's then that she looks back up at you, a thoughtful expression on her face.

They say it was some sort of cosplayer that got killed on the way to the concert, but the conspiracy theorists think an alien killed Ruri and took her place. That was forgotten about quickly, because she was right there, and a family quickly identified the corpse as a missing daughter."

...Well. That's something to take note of. You also note that that particular bit of information isn't on Mami's file.

"Well, of course. You don't get to know about that unless you've been a big fan of her for a long time, and I've been one since she came into the scene!" Sayaka says this with no small amount of pride. If you could only capture this moment, to show her how much of a nerd she's being currently.

Something else that IS on Mami's file, however, is a note that says at the Hotel, you'll be meeting with one of Ruri's own staff, codenamed 'Deepthroat'. The contact will be waiting at the entrance, and there'll be an exchange of passphrases.

Your response to the passphrase 'May The Lord Smile' will be 'And the Devil Have Mercy'.

Quietly panic. Inform Sayaka that someone in our particular business should know better than to just ignore coincidences like that just because it is convenient.
Do we have any experience dealing with Callidus Magical Girls, aside from Midori? If not, we should call Mami and ask for tips on not getting mind-raped.

We could place a call back for Mami to have someone research the incident.

There must have been prints of the body or blood samples collected. We might be able to snag a copy to compare against.

Though an infiltrationist of the highest order would likely have altered records.

So if we can find prints, we can compare against records the possible infiltrator cannot touch.

Sayaka's collect of memorabilia. I bet my entire collection of warhams shes got SOME that Ruri touched that she sealed and didn't touch again.

If we can dust those for comparison prints and we can obtain the police prints (Most definately on file), we've gold.

Iori thought that Yayoi was receiving psychiatric help. It didn't become clear that Yayoi had died until after the Midori mission.

The parallels are unsettling.

What's worse is that Midori's illusions followed into time stop when absolutely nothing should happen at all. Either dealing with Callidus is our Achilles Heel, or Midorin is crazy powerful and she's just lazy about how she applies herself.

Either way, this isn't looking good.

You ask Sayaka how she didn't find anything weird with that incident. Of course, you're not as paranoid as to believe the conspiracy theorists about an alien abduction, but...well, aliens exist. The both of you work for one. And people exist that can do things that break the rules of physics, i.e. Magical Girls. So, the question you're asking here is - and you make the effort to be diplomatic - is she this stupid by default, or is it because she's an Eversor?

Sayaka blinks at you, before scowling. "...Murderface, we've been getting along very well despite everything, and I promised Kyoko I wouldn't pursue an early retirement by just punching a sword right through your ugly face and biting your soul gem into pieces. Say that kind of shit again and I won't care what kind of promise I made, I'll hack you into pieces even before you can touch that fucking shield of yours."

The both of you glare at each other in silence - you wondering if you've gone too far this time, and if you should be pulling steel at that moment - before a tiny, tiny smirk curls the corner of Sayaka's lips. It finally turns into a smile, and then she leans back, chuckling.

"Well, of course I thought about that, yeah. But that was a long time ago, two years I think, just when she was getting into the whole solo idol thing. And it happened in Santa Destroy - highest murder rates in America, or until the US government finally shut Varrigan City down. It was written off as one of those random murders, poor kid." The blue-haired Eversor shakes her head. "And she was under the protection of the Eighth there, you know. And they're pretty hardcore." She looks up at the ceiling for a moment, grinning at a memory. "Well, not as hardcore as us, but. Sufficiently hardcore."

Yeah. Alright. That's...not as suspicious, now.

Anyway, can you see her tickets for a second?

"Huh? Well, sure." She hands the meticulously-arranged wad of tickets over, and you flip through them one by one. "Agh, Christ, take it easy! You'll wrinkle them! For fuck's sake, Murderface, if one of them gets folded or dog-eared--"

She should relax. You're just checking out the numbers and taking note of them. You give them back after a moment, and she looks at you suspiciously before putting the wad back into her wallet.

...You counted no less than fifty tickets, there. Just how long has she been a fan of Kirishima Ruri, anyway?

"Haven't you been listening?" Sayaka frowns at you. "I've been keeping up with her ever since she started her career as a solo idol! Pay attention, Murderface!"

It's Chiaki, you remind her. So...about this touching Magical Girls with her songs--

"It's not...it's not like that! I mean, er..." The Eversor furrows her brow, evidently frustrated that she has to explain her fandom, and to all people, you. "It's...it's like she understands what it's like being a Magical Girl, even when not being one, you know? Of course, she doesn't say it outright, but you can tell by the lyrics. That kind of stuff. ...Wait, what did you--did you just take a picture of me, Murderface?!"

Yes. Yes you did. You place your smartphone back into your inventory with a smile.

"What the fuck for?!"

No reason. You just wanted to.

"Well, delete it! Don't take pictures of people without asking for permission! That's just fucking rude--"

Before you could get into an argument about protocol with Sayaka does the car stop - and Kumatora, who's been driving, calls your attention to the fact that you are already at your destination. You thank the young woman, and open the door at your side - instantly letting in a wall of sound, consisting of screeching fangirls, yelling fanboys and screaming journalists.

There's not just a crowd in front of the Hotel's entrance, there's a goddamn mob. The entire front of the building has a building-sized poster draped in front of it, depicting the idol in a rather form-fitting costume with her midriff exposed, her long green hair tied into her trademark twintails, flashing the entire world a victory sign.

The fans are screaming the idol's name as one, waving posters, CDs and placards. Sayaka makes a noise you will never forget her making - and immediately barrels into the crowd, holding up the placard and joining in the chant. Local police and a few burly security guards are trying to keep things peaceful, but they're considerably harangued.

Normal people are weird.

Actually, this works to our benefit. If Sayaka's blending in completely like one of her thousands of rabid fans, she's a perfect hidden wildcard if things go to shit. Much more inconspicuuis than having her formally on the security detail.

You keep your eyes trained at the mob just as you reply with the proper passphrase. The contact seems to be satisfied at this, but doesn't let go of your sleeve just yet. Seemingly waiting for something. You decided to wait alongside her, finding it increasingly difficult not to laugh as you watch Sayaka elbow a fan aside to get closer to the entrance, where it seems another idol was talking into a megaphone. The fan, a rather heavyset young man with glasses, doubles up clutching his side, very nearly getting trampled but was easily dragged to the side by some of the authorities.

"We'll be announcing the winner of the Four Day Date With Ruri-chan in just a moment, everyone! So just please keep your tickets handy as we come up with the winning number!"

Huh. Well. That should be your cue. But...well, 'Deepthroat' hasn't yet quite let go of your sleeve - and you're not all that eager to expose someone else to Pinky's insanity.

Still...you gently shake your hand in a silent query.

"...I-I was asked to wait," Deepthroat's voice becomes fainter, more tremulous, as if she's about to cry. "H-have to wait for the s-signal...a-and then I give you something."

...You never heard about this, but sure, you'll play along.

"Please...p-please don't shoot my legs off," Deepthroat's grip on you is shaking now. "Please...please don't tear my face off and eat it. Please."

What? The shock of this makes you turn your head, now - and you get an eyeful of a girl, just a few inches taller than Misaka, wearing a black sweater with the hood pulled up. Despite this, you can see black unruly hair peeking out from under the hood, along with large, dark-ringed green eyes. Like someone who hasn't been getting enough sleep.

She's shaking harder now, and...well, you try your best not to reassure her that you won't do any of those things. Not without reason, anyway.

She shakes even harder at that. She's...she's crying now, isn't she? Really? You just made a young girl cry? Well, that's just dandy, isn't it?

"Alright! Here's the winning number! Everyone, check your tickets! The winning number is Seven! Six! Three! Three! One--"

As you watch the crowd scramble for their tickets as one, you decide to make your move right then. You have a contest to rig. You make to pull your hand away, but instead you feel something being pressed into it. Something like a small card...

You look at your hand, and realize that she's palmed you a ticket.

"Five!"

...5.

"That's it! Who's got the winning number?! Please step forward!"

How do you react?

I really do think we should foist it off on Sayaka. People were bitching about how we were "letting Iori push us around", I don't want to see us giving this unknown and potentially-enemy idol throwing us into crap like this with no warning or planning on our part. We've go to stand out ground and establish that we do things OUR way, as Warmaster.

...Seriously? They rigged the contest, breaking some poor benighted fan's heart just to get you to be close enough to their idol?

No. They do something like this, they tell you first. You didn't make Warmaster just to get jerked around like this.
Shit like this may have flown when you were just a rank-and-file Vindicare, but not now.

The gears in your Shield gnash together with a horrible screeching, grinding noise - and the mechanisms within finally lock into place as you force it a complete one hundred and eighty degrees. Color bleeding out of the world as everything freezes into place - the screaming fans, the tickets fluttering to the ground, the panicking guards. You step forward, picking your way carefully through the melee - finding Sayaka after a moment, the blue-haired girl frozen in the middle of frantically checking her tickets.

"Oh, it's Homura-chan!" A familiar voice comes in from somewhere - and you look around for a bit, before spotting Pinky wearing...fangirl gear. Well, it's actually a nice departure from her poofy, frilly costume - a rather soft and tasteful cream cotton sweater and spats.

She's holding in her clawed hands a WE <3 RURI placard, the letters looking like they've been written in blood. "I wasn't expecting you to visit so early after the last time! What are you--" She starts to ask, but her eyes narrow as she sees you carefully sneak your ticket into Sayaka's pile.

"...Is that the smartest thing to do, Homura-chan? I mean, I've always known Sayaka-chan to pay very careful attention about this sort of thing, and she might notice an unfamiliar ticket..." It's then that she shrugs, grinning toothily. "...You never know what might happen!"

How do you respond?

[]...You're right. I probably shouldn't.
[]It's easier this way. Besides, I don't like idols much.

Of course that's assuming she's up to no good.

The California heat beat down on our backs for what felt like the third or fourth eternity in a row, now. It had been the same thing every day, lately: get up before dawn and head out to the Garden of Sinners (or, if we weren't already there when dawn broke, get yanked out of bed and dragged there by our thumbs). Then, work under the blazing hot sun in a humid jungle of vibrant, colorful hate, breaking up and hauling compost and carting buckets of water around the field until it was too dark to see our hands in front of our faces. At the end, we'd drag our burnt, bleeding asses home and lick our wounds. Maybe try and get some sleep before doing it all over again. We were all pretty much in agreement – we fucking hated that garden.

Garden didn't like us much either, though. It liked to fight back, even while we were feeding it. Lashed out at us from every direction, without warning and nearly without pause, from sunup to well past sundown. Never figured out whether that was some kind of training, or some kind of test, or if Miss Marigold was just that crazy, but it was probably a mixture of the three. …If you ask me, it was mostly because we were better, fresher meat than the compost, made mostly of what was left of the poor sons of bitches that crossed the Eighth over the past month or so, left to rot out in the sun. The sinners, Miss Marigold called them.

We were once again freeing Annie from a tulip or fuck-knows-what that had decided she looked like an insect, a scorpion, or a corpse, and Mary and I shared a silent understanding that this was probably going to be the one where she cracked and started to cry. Her body was already covered in burns from the sun and digestive juices – so were ours – and she had, even before the most recent acid bath, reached a level of sheer, constant bitching that was usually reserved for five-year-olds on cross-country car trips. …We were both surprised to find instead, though, that she was completely silent as she came out. At first we were worried that it had managed to snag her soul gem, somehow, but that notion went pretty quickly as she transformed.

Gone were the acid-stained work clothes that she hadn't had time to wash in a week, and gone was any trace of playfulness in her demeanor. Didn't even bother to grab onto her sister and start their little transformation chant – Mary looked even more confused than I was, at that. I'd seen her insist on it in the middle of a firefight before, and seeing one lacy black and white outfit without the other was sort of disconcerting.

"Fuck this. Fuck it. Fuck flowers. Fuck the sun. Fuck the Warmaster. Ah'm gonna go kill 'er." A vine lashed out at her from behind, and she drew her sword instinctively and cut it. Didn't even turn …It was the most serious I'd ever seen her.

…What? I couldn't even formulate a response to that. We couldn't even scratch her when we tried to kill her together. With a plan. And not on her home turf. It was literally the dumbest thing I'd ever heard Annie say. Probably the dumbest thing I'd ever heard anyone say.

"…Yeah. Annie's right." Mary had to think it over for a second, but she changed, too, into a frilled-out witch's outfit that must have been way too hot for the weather, complete with big, doofy hat. "We can't jes' do this ferever. It's a waste of our goddamn time. Bet she's just tryin' ta see how much bullshit we'll put up with 'fore we die'r go crazy, 'n try'n eat each other or somethin'." Her eyes flicked toward Annie – she looked worried. There wasn't even a small, half-assed laugh at her dumb little cannibalism joke. ...In any other situation, we would have both been happy to see Annie stop screwing around for two seconds, but…it was really creepy.

With a sigh, I transformed, too. Didn't know where the gazebo at the center of the garden was from here, and somebody had to pop up and take a look.

The flowers didn't like it when you flew here. I'd seem then lash at the birds that went overhead, and whenever I tried to lift off with my broom, they all pitched a fit at once. Only needed to be up there for a second, though-

"It's this way," Annie mumbled, decisively. "…Sinners here ain't too fond of bein' plant food. They started pointin' soon as we started talkin'." …That was cool too. I just…put the broom away. …Not that I was looking forward to trying to pull off that flight. I thought for a second that she was going to toss her other sword to Mary and start bushwhacking, but the two of them shared a meaningful look, and I knew what was coming.

The best way to announce our intent, I guess. The Springfield Sisters' way of doing things. Flashy. Violent. Direct.

Silver glinted in the sunlight as she slipped her signature weapon - a huge, sleek revolver – from the inside of her hat. …Two huge chambers, one on each side of the cylinder, each suited more to holding a small egg than a bullet. One was already preloaded, and it left a soft blue trail as she gave the cylinder a spin, a grin erasing some of the exhaustion on her face as Annie formed up behind her.

“Hold onta yer hats!” She was the only one with a hat. “Shut th’hell up, Cooldown!” It spun faster and faster, and she took aim in the direction Annie’d pointed us. …The flowers around us all seemed to rustle, then, as a small beam of light pierced the entire garden from the barrel of that little silver gun, they started to raise all hell. Didn’t have much time for it, though, before the laser swelled out, burning us a huge path through the flowers in one glorious, ozone-scented blast of America.

We didn’t miss a beat – didn’t have time. Annie quit bracing her sister before the beam even dissipated, bolting out in front of us to cover the distance between us and the Warmaster, now a small figure at the very end of the new path. At the same time, I pulled a broom into creation, and Mary snagged it without a second thought, half-dragging me into the front to drive while she…

Oh shit. Oh no no no. It was the second-worst idea I’d heard all day. She screamed something about buckling up into my ear and aimed her gun backwards. There was no way I could control it if she did that, I tried to tell her in the frantic second before we shifted into Super Turbo Crash Into The Ground And Fucking Die mode.

Didn’t work.

I heard Annie cackle as we passed by her, just barely, over the wind in my ears, the loud hum of the laser, and Mary’s whooping behind me. I had about two seconds to think of a plan as we raced toward the Warmaster, who stood resolutely with her parasol out. …She wasn’t going to move. She had no intention of trying to avoid us, or maybe she was protecting her private place behind her, the gazebo in the center of the garden. It wasn’t ideal, but it gave me yet another retarded idea, just in time.

I screamed for Mary to bail, though she must have read my mind. I heard her shift behind me, then fall off of the broom at the last second before I dismissed it, mid-air, just a few feet from Miss Marigold. Everything seemed to move in slow motion as I rocketed toward her, knife recalled and directed toward her ribcage. I could get her. Because of Mary’s stupid stunt, we could get her right here, before things got-

CRACK. The world flipped and spun as something connected with the side of my head, sending me careening off course into the grass next to the gazebo. I thought for a second my neck might have broken, and I was pretty sure I now had a goddamn dent in my head, but rolling through the grass would have probably killed me in either case. ...Figured out it was a roundhouse, once my thoughts weren’t a starry jumble in my head. The Warmaster wasn’t that quick, so she’d probably been waiting for one of us to pull something. I could hear Annie’s swords clashing against her parasol behind me as I pulled myself to my feet. Then, I felt a tug on my sleeve.

“…We were reading.” Lily gave me a sour look, clutching a book to her chest with her other hand. …Poor kid. I ruffled her hair and apologized. Told her to stand back, because things were going to get messy. …She asked if we were going to kill Miss Marigold, but I ignored her. …Visualized cold. Death. Nothingness. A new trick I’d been toying with, and an excuse to use it.

Not just to escape an inquisitive ten-year-old. Probably.

My body lost all substance, all weight, and I pushed my hand against the side of the gazebo. …Went right through.

Good. Then I felt my body start to fall, and I forced myself not to think about how I was still standing on solid ground. Just needed to hold this up for a minute, or so I figured. Long enough to slip behind Miss Marigold and figure out a plan.

Annie, in a straight fight, outsped just about anyone I knew, especially the Warmaster. She wasn't, though, not as well as she should have been – it was something about Miss Marigold. She controlled the pace of any situation she was in. She wasn't even bothering to defend more than halfheartedly as Annie slashed at her, most of her swings barely breaking skin as each idle movement the Warmaster made threatened to cave a part of Annie's skeleton in.

After a hundred tiny scratches and about ten seconds of what looked like total futility, Annie threw her offhand-sword aside, though, and started to two-hand. As if she could read her sister's mind, Mary took her cue – the muzzle of her gun flashed as she snuck shots in under her sister's arms, over her shoulder, just past her ear, anywhere she could hit to throw Miss Marigold's rhythm off. Anywhere she could do even a little damage.

But in giving Sayaka the ticket and making her stick out, that may draw undue attention to her. If this person is versed in any Meguca roster, then he or she will recognize Sayaka straight away when she walks forward with every public eye on her.

That neutralizes the advantage of having her blending in with the crowd; even if she was recognized, she could lose herself in the sea of squeeing fangirls and then make an appearance later. Now she'll be easily observable and easily confrontable.

The Warmaster grasped Annie's sword and began to squeeze, and the whole world seemed to stop for a moment. We could all hear it cracking in her grip, even as a trickle of blood ran down her wrist. …There was a tension in her voice as Miss Marigold started to speak - a hint of real, genuine anger, for the first time since I'd met her. …I could barely bring myself to move, and Mary'd stopped firing, nearly dropping her gun.

"Ah have grown terribly bo'uhed of yo'uh-"

"Shut the FUCK up!" Electricity ran through my body, shocking it awake again as Annie screamed out days and days of pouting in four words, delivering a punch wrapped in lightless, blood-red lightning directly to Miss Marigold's face. She wasn't thrown off for long – just a split second, but more than enough time. My hand wrapped under her chin as her head snapped back, and I drove my knife into her throat as hard as I could. …It was like trying to stab a tree, but Annie followed up immediately, jamming her fist into it and driving it pretty much all the way through.

I ducked low and swept the Warmaster's legs as Annie dove on top of her, sending her to the ground. She ripped the ruby brooch off of her chest and hurled it toward Mary, and I rolled away and grabbed for her discarded sword, tossing it to her in the same instant. Mary's gun began to hum, now loaded with the soul gems of both Springfield Sisters, and with one strong thrust made mostly in desperation, Annie shoved her sword through Miss Marigold's stomach, pinning her down just in time for a thin laser to split the air.

We all watched in silence as Mary fired an enormous beam of stars, fireworks, and fuck yourself at the fallen Warmaster, ripping through the earth under her, destroying the gazebo and a massive chunk of the garden behind her. Lily, at least, managed to slip over to us, and had latched onto my hand, staring expectantly at the laser, then at the pit.

"Puh'haps Ah was remiss in unduhestimatin' y'all." The Warmaster's slow drawl gurgled out amidst all the smoke …What stood in the huge pit that used to be the gazebo was more monster than magical girl. There were remnants of a simple, red-checked skirt, sure, but most of her body was scorched nearly to the bone, and what wasn't seemed to be covered in colorful blossoms. Wherever Annie had cut her. Where I'd stabbed her. All blooming beautifully. Tiny vines spread out from them across her body, forming new muscle tissue, then draining any excess blood. Turning slowly into a pale, creamy skintone, as she regenerated before our eyes. …Even the fried wireframe of her parasol started to grow another radiant bloom.

“Considuh mah mercih exhauwsted.”

…Fuck.

Couldn’t move. Couldn’t breathe. Could barely see the others through the fresh hell of the Warmaster’s garden. I was dimly aware of the sharp vines sticking through me, though I could tell by how conscious I was and how much I could breathe that she’d avoided my vitals. …Wanted to set an example. Hurt our bodies. Hurt our pride. Make sure we’re still here to crawl back tomorrow. It was Miss Marigold’s special kind of sadism, though she wasn’t usually so…enthusiastic about it.

Mary was no better off, not ten feet away, though she hadn’t given up as easy. Kept finding new ways to take shots, even after she was down. Marigold crushed her ribcage for it, though it was probably just as much to piss Annie off. Always was her ‘favorite’. Tried to push her the hardest, and out of the three of us she, she usually pushed back the hardest, too.

…Never as hard as she did today, though. …

…As soon as the light in Mary’s eyes went out, the world went cold. The color seemed to pour out of it, and the dark smile on the Warmaster’s face grew. Then fell. Then…I wasn’t sure what I was looking at anymore, as everything went monochrome. The life surrounding us hadn’t disappeared, but something inside it seemed to crumble, each flower wilting silently, no longer dancing to Miss Marigold’s call. Not even the ones that had oh-so-happily dug into various parts of my body moved – if I tried, I could probably cut myself free. …If my body was anything but dead weight right then, anyway.

In place of the plants, something else moved. …People. Hundreds of people in the flower-jungle, each barely-visible, shades among the stark gray of the plants. Staring. Staring at us. At Annie. At the Warmaster. Whispers I couldn’t quite make out passed through them, and a sickening scent filled the air.

Reminded me of Lily, a distinct, cloying smell of sugar and death. …Wonderland in a nutshell. Trying to follow either of the fighters’ movements made me feel sick in the pit of my stomach; both moved unnaturally, like no human could, interposed with their bodies a moment earlier, and a moment later, all stretched and distorted. Annie’s voice…I thought it was hers, anyway…echoed through the air, with another laid on top of it – one higher, teeth-rottingly sweet and cackling.

Someone crouched over Mary – I couldn’t tell who right away thanks to the special distortions or whatever the hell it was Annie’s magic was causing, but it must have been Lily. She didn’t seem…right. She started to giggle along with Annie’s voice and the other, and…And it was kind of catchy. Heh. Some words appeared faintly in my mind, but I couldn’t quite place them. I caught myself moving my lips, trying to parse them out, trying to figure out what they could be.

The black and gray sky split as Annie and the Warmaster fought, though it was barely a fight – even with her new home field advantage, Annie was down strength, and experience, and…something. Something tugging at the tip of my tongue. …Without those. The things the sky split for, two golden pillars in a dreary wasteland, twin scythes, sharp enough to cut a hole into reality itself. Hee. That’s what it was. That’s what this place was.

They were important, those words. The scythes told me so, as I stared up at them. As Annie took them, and as she cut into Miss Marigold, again and again.

They were clawing at my mind. At the deepest parts of my soul. I needed to know them.

They were more important than Lily, even as her teeth dug into Mary's body.

More important than my life, draining out as the vines in me withered and died.

More important than the new patch of color that had appeared – a girl in pink, the source of the other voice. Scenery. Distracting.

Annie wasn't herself anymore. Her eyes had gone. The pink thing had taken them, but she smiled a wide, cracked smile. A caricature of a broken doll's face. The words repeated in my mind, over and over, and as the last bit of my life left me, I finally understood. Finally knew what they were.

The flesh of fallen angels.

Woke up feeling like a sack of lead shit. Wright said that the Warmaster had dragged all of us back in one of the carts – three corpses and a petrified little girl, one that wouldn't say a word about what happened. I was in the best shape, of the three of us. Seemed like Miss Marigold had torn the other two pretty much to shreds. Guess I lucked out. Or she didn't care about teaching me that lesson.

Whatever. I'll take it.

Nakajima was already patching the other two up – more like putting them back together, it looked like, and Wright was left to take care of Lily and me. Kid looked like hell, and that wasn't easy, given the kind of things Lily…usually did. There was no trace of her usual energy, and she jumped whenever Wright would talk to her. Ended up just hugging the poor kid and stroking her hair, telling her it was okay now. Telling her she was fine. We were fine. Miss Marigold was fine. Just went to her office to rest.

…Apparently I was supposed to go talk to her, when I was up and about. But I wasn't ready to get my stomach pierced again. …Was that what happened? Didn't matter. Whatever she had to chew me out about, I could deal with it later. Wright promised she'd cover me until I was feeling better. I told her it might be a few days, though.

My head hurt like a motherfucker, and for the first time in a while, all I wanted to do was sleep.

So much rain. Always rain. Odette stared up at the night sky, ignoring the water droplets hitting her face. Waiting for Lotte to finish scouting around the club had ended up giving her some much needed time to think. Her back pressed against the cold steel hide of Sleepy Sue, she idly pondered her position in life. The one word that really seemed to sum it all up was 'shitty'. Granted, things were starting to look up, but it was still a turd no matter how much she tried to spit shine it. That just made it a turd covered in spit.

Inside, the two younger Eversors had managed to rope the warmaster into a game of Go Fish while they waited. It took a few rounds for Meg to get over her fear of winning against Therese, but she managed to come around soon enough. Odette cringed once more as she heard the tiny girl sound another victory cry from within. She was still a bit sore about finding someone the same size as her with such a nice figure. It felt like every one of her shouts was something personal.

Odette looked up and down the streets for a moment, then cautiously pulled a pack of cigarettes from her pocket. After Freddy had told her they came in flavoured varieties, well, she simply had to give it a try. For some reason she felt an obligation to fit her new grumpy, brooding image. Holding a protective hand over the smoke, she managed to get it lit and took her first puff-

-then immediately spat the whole thing out of her mouth on reflex. She coughed and hacked, a fist pressed to her chest. It didn't taste like cherry. It didn't taste like cherry at all.

"Odette, are you okay?" Therese asked as she poked her head out of the armoured car's turret.

The coughing girl simply gave a thumbs up, unable to speak through her wheezing.

"Is- Is that a lighter?" The warmaster asked in an accusatory tone. "Were you SMOKING?"

Odette shook her head, quickly stashing the lighter back in her pocket. "No, ma'am," she wheezed out.

Therese huffed and pouted, shouting, "Fine, but if I catch you smoking I'll- I'll-"

The warmaster conceded with a sigh and receded back into the armoured car. Once again, Odette was left alone with her thoughts. It seemed that she'd have to settle for sweets and poetry instead of smoking and drinking. But then again, she thought to herself, it wasn't as if people like that really existed. It wasn't healthy to romanticize that sort of thing.

More and more, Odette found herself feeling lonely when she was left alone like this. She used to relish the chance to just be able to sit and think. Now it felt more and more like a punishment. She could have gone in to play cards easily enough, but... It just seemed like her presence would make things awkward. It was like going out for drinks with your boss. Except, she wasn't their boss. Not anymore, at least.

The world melted around her as she looked over into the eyes of the girl in the hat. Her presence would normally put Odette on edge, but for once she just welcomed the company.

"Come to laugh at me?" The one-eyed girl asked.

"A little," the one in the hat conceded. "But I don't think I need to. Seems you're doing my job for me these days."

Odette nodded, at a loss for words. For the time, she'd just let the other girl speak her peace.

"You've noticed it yourself, haven't you?" She asked, leaning her head against Odette's shoulder. "The North Wind is blowing again, just like our dear Charlotte said. But why was she keeping it a secret, I wonder."

"Does it matter?"

"No, no. I suppose it doesn't," the girl in the hat laughed to herself. "A few weeks ago you couldn't even remember Miss Valnikov's name. Imagine my surprise when you were telling stories about her earlier."

Odette nodded again, this time a far more shallow one.

"Wouldn't it be nice to have those times back..." It was less a question and more simple wishful thinking. "You have a good reason to take your post back now, don't you? Hid it under your bed, hm?"

The one-eyed girl took a deep breath. She just couldn't get the termination order out of her mind. She'd shoved it under her cot while she thought about what to do with it. Should she talk to someone about it? Would it be better to confront the incubator directly? Odette just couldn't sort her thoughts out and the hat wearing ghost certainly wasn't helping.

"I think I'll leave you on a better note this time," the girl said, adjusting her baseball cap. "Good luck with finding this monster. And take care of yourself. I know you don't like to admit it, but I really do care about your well-being."

Odette smiled gently and muttered, "I know you do."

Some time passed before Lotte finally arrived. The Callidus found Odette humming some unheard tune, smiling with her eyes closed as she did. For a few minutes, Lotte simply stood and watched the girl revelling in the rain. When Odette finally opened her eyes, she found the blonde looking on thoughtfully, with her hand on her chin.

"How- How long have you been there?" Odette stammered.

Ten minutes later, Odette peered around the corner of a building in a darkened alley. Two men were guarding the club's back door, unarmed, but with a pair of metal pipes conveniently leaning against the wall by the door. Odette turned to Mona, who leaned against the wall beside her, and informed her of the situation.

It had been agreed that the two Eversors would break in through the back while the other three tried to get into the club's VIP lounge. Lotte had reasoned that Helk had to be in one of the two locations.

"I'll take care of these two," Odette whispered. "Wait here."

The tall girl nodded, shifting into her costume in a flash. Odette, on the other hand, refrained from doing so. Instead, she simply walked out into the light and strode up to the men, making sure to look as unimposing as possible - not difficult task given her stature.

As she neared them, both men stepped up to her.

Odette continued walking, only stopping when both men put their hands on her shoulders.

"I guess you didn't hear m- GHURK."

The man gurgled as a spear shot up through his throat, just as one did to his partner. Odette withdrew her two spears from the men as her cloak unfurled down from her shoulders. Mona let out a low whistle as she stepped out from behind the building and admired Odette's handiwork.

"I'd heard stories about the Silver Lady," she said, a distinct tone of admiration in her voice. "Meg wouldn't shut up about you. Guess she wasn't lying. You sure as hell look the part."

Under her cloak, Odette's costume was not entirely unlike a traditional magical girl outfit, albeit a bit more armoured. A banded platinum metal breastplate wrapped around her meagre chest atop a frilled top with equally frilly shoulder straps. Delicate white gloves stretched all the way up to the middle of her upper arm adorned with shining vambraces, matching a pair of pure white thighhigh stockings with plate greaves on her legs. A delicate white pleated skirt hung from her waist under a set of faulds, completing the ensemble. The entire costume conjured images of warrior-princesses, and Mona could only marvel at the sight of the fabled Winter Warmaster herself.

Odette let out a short breath of laughter as she flicked the blood from her two spears. Each one had a dark wooden haft and an intricately designed silver head, matching the platinum metal of her armour. She twirled them about for a few moments, getting herself used to the feeling once more. Both spears were perfectly balanced, equally good for throwing as they were for melee combat. Odette had always preferred spears over other weapons. They could be thrust, swung or thrown and were easy to use for a novice, yet deadly in the hands of a master. Satisfied, she gave Mona a nodded and motioned for the door.

"Quick and efficient," Odette said. "No dawdling. We clear one room, we move onto the next. These asshats are responsible for selling soulgems as fucking accessories. Remember that."

"Don't think I'll forget. Glad I have a competent leader," Mona laughed. "You're the boss."

They broke down the door in short order, hurrying through to the other side to find a trio of men playing cards at a table. The men looked shocked at the sudden appearance of the magical girls, scrambling for their weapons. Odette impaled the first of the thugs and gave a hard push downward, driving the spear into the floor. The second barely had time to react before Mona's buckler smashed into his face with a sickening crack as her rapier ripped through his chest.

The third man backed up against the far wall and made for a gun at his waist, but was stopped as one of Odette's spears soared through his ribcage and stuck him against the wall. The gun clattered to the ground as his hand went limp.

The one-eyed magical girl cocked her head at the gun. "Take it."

Mona raised an eyebrow and looked utterly baffled. "What for?"

"Might be useful," Odette laughed. "And you can get that whole pirate-swashbuckler thing goin'."

"Damn straight."

Thankfully, there was only one door leading out of the room. The two girls nodded at each other and Odette waved a hand at it. Mona grinned and violently kicked it down before dashing through. There were only two goons this time, though, both were armed and ready after the commotion

Without a second thought, Mona charged the closer of the two, who held a revolver in a shaky hand. His hand dropped to the floor with a wet thump, followed by his gun. Spinning around to recover, the Eversor drew her sword across his throat in a spray of blood, splattering her costume. Odette had already taken care of the other thug - she leaned an elbow on the end of her spear, which was currently occupying the fallen man's chest cavity.

The pair scanned the room, spotting two doors. Mona glanced at the silver-haired girl and cocked an eyebrow.

"Which way, boss?" She asked.

The other door led to an L-shaped hall, with one man in clear view at the opposite end. A spear sailed through his mouth and burst through the back of his skull.

"Nice throw," Mona whispered.

Odette nodded, clearly impressed. "Nice shot."

After turning the corner and smashing through the next door, they were greeted by a single man. He was greeted by a rapier to the lower intestine. There were only two doors, one on the left wall and another that seemed to lead into the club proper.

The next room wasn't entirely what they expected. It looked like a hastily put together teenage girl's room, with a cot instead of a full bed and poorly painted pink walls. On the far side of the room was yet another door with faint traces of blood stained on the floor.

"Guess this is it," Odette mumbled.

Mona nodded without a word and the duo stepped up to the door. With great care, the one-eyed girl quietly turned the knob and peered through. A darkened staircase led down from the top, with absolutely no care taken to clean the dried blood off of the steps. The pair looked at each other and shrugged before cautiously descending.

The room at the bottom was simple and square, with a single light dangling from the middle of the ceiling. Blood covered the concrete walls, which were pock-marked with holes and dents. Directly under the light was a battered and bloodied fellow duct taped to a cheap plastic chair. The two girls approached and Mona's eyes widened as she noticed the freshly reopened hole in his palm.

"Rossi?!" She cried out.

With a groan, the man looked up and stared at her with one eye, the other swollen shut. He grinned maliciously, a couple bloody holes in his gums where teeth once were.

"Heya sweetcheeks," he said in a voice barely above a whisper. "Long time no see."

"Caught you snitching, eh?" Odette asked, circling around him.

"Then where are they?" Mona asked, seizing his hair and pulling his head up.

"Fennel? That her name? She's off making one last hit. She figured you'd be here, Odette," he sneered. "Looks like you cleared out the welcoming party, just like she said."

"Funny story," he laughed. "I thought I recognized ponytail here. You're Bernard's kid, aintcha?"

The corners of Mona's mouth contorted as she bore her teeth at the man. "The hell does my father have to do with this?"

"Oh? Oh you don't know?" Rossi let out a sharp laughing followed by a fit of coughing. "Yer dad's been gettin' in with the wrong crowd. He's been lending money to some baaaad people. He was on Helk's hitlist anyway, but when I told him that it was his daughter that got me," the bloodied man snickered, "well, Helk thought he might want to bump him up the list a bit. You'll probably find the Wolf at your place."

The tall girl's rapier clattered to the ground and vanished in a torrent of sparkles. "No... No..."

The two ran up the stairs, the one-eyed girl chasing after Mona. Odette pulled her cellphone and hit speed dial. After a few rings, Therese picked up.

"Odette? Did you fi-"

"HE'S AT THE AIRPORT," Odette shouted. "Send Lotte around the back, tell her to follow the bodies. Fennel's going after Mona's dad."

"What?!" Therese screamed. "We're on our way!"

***

Therese and Meg had rushed out of the club without a second thought. The two stood at the street corner, Therese tapped her foot impatiently as she thought.

"Megan? It was Megan, right?" She asked the other girl.

"My friends call me Meg-"

"Do you have a ride?" The warmaster snapped.

"Y-yeah!" Meg answered eagerly. "We can take Gold-Mane! But... don't you have a company car?"

"I kind of," Therese looked away as a bit colour rushed to her face, "got mad at it. And stuff."

"O-okay," the smaller Eversor mumbled.

The golden motorcycle appeared beside her and revved impatiently. Meg mounted up with Therese clinging to her shoulder with one hand and brandishing her hammer in the other.

Lotte stepped down the last of the concrete stairs into Rossi's abode. In one hand, she carried a leather briefcase containing her tools; in the other, she twirled a butterfly knife between her fingers. She came to a stop directly in front of him, then crouched and looked up into his face.

"Hello, friend," she greeted him. "I heard you were the man everyone's been talking to."

"'m a bit tired," he mumbled, slowly slipping out of consciousness.

"Don't say that. I just want a little bit of," her eyes narrowed as she pulled a syringe from her briefcase, "information."

Sayaka got out of the car with us. If that's enough to blow cover we're already fucked. And we aren't hiding from Ruri, we just don't want to go out in the open, on stage, in front of God and everybody when we just had someone deliver a fake Mami head to us.

Again, Sayaka is made for this situation. She's better with people, she's better at killing lots of people (since Pinky compromises our ability to kill lots of people) and she knows the principal a shit-ton more than we do.

>If that's enough to blow cover we're already fucked
The contact was able to pick us out almost immediately because of the armored car. So I think it's safe to say that the car was watched. And at least Sayaka could get lost in the mob, so even if she was seen getting out of the car, she had a baseball cap on to hide her face along with many of the other fans to prevent immediate identification.

Sayaka is also not equipped with a Golden Weapon on a mission where meeting a hostile with a Golden Weapon is almost certain. That puts Sayaka into harm's way without an equivalent weapon.

And while Pinky hasn't always been forthcoming, she hasn't lied about an approaching threat, so I think ignoring her warning is going to bite us in the ass.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 06/23/13(Sun)07:50 No.25599634

You are a Magical Girl, and while you're very easily annoyed, you're not very easily impressed.

It's amusing, then, that the principal of the mission you're currently running is rapidly achieving both. And you haven't even met her.

Rigging her own contest just to give you a convenient cover? An excuse to be seen around with her by the media for the four days she'll be around Mitakihara?

This Kirishima Ruri's got balls, that's for sure. Annoying as it is, you can't help but admire that kind of audacity.

You'll probably just shoot someone in the leg for it later. Maybe.

"So what are you gonna do, Homura-chan?" You've stopped time for the moment, giving yourself time to decide on whether or not to come forward with the winning ticket - one palmed to you by a strange girl going by the name of 'Deepthroat' - or simply foist it off to Sayaka, who seems to be a super Ruri Maniac. Pinky, as usual, is harping on you about it, her mischievous grin showing blood-pinked teeth filed into sharp points. "Sayaka-chan may be a bit dumb now and then, but she's not as stupid as you think she is!"

Well, you've never really said anything like that. Sayaka can be a super bitch most of the time, but you've never thought of her as someone...stupid, for a lack of a better term. In fact, if you'll be honest, underneath Sayaka's thousand or so layers of insufferable cunt is a magical girl who takes her job very seriously - someone who dots all her Is, crosses all her Ts, and confirms every kill with a double-tap to the face.

Of course, that doesn't really change things much. You're still barely on speaking terms with each other. It's...probably just one of those things, you guess. Both of you hate each other, that's a fact of life. You don't have to lose sleep over it.

...Heh. She sure is acting stupid about the idol, though. It's...it's not like you've made a fool of yourself doing anything similar.

Yeah. Yeah, never.

Anyway. What do you do with the ticket?

[]Let Sayaka have it. You're not going to let some chirping harpy dictate how you do your job.

I"m tempted to tell the idol professionally to fuck off by giving the ticket to somebody else, and then going 'okay, you asked for the Warmaster, here I am'. Having Sayaka in disguise as an actual fan might work out for the best. Throwing a wrench into the whole thing might work out for the best.

On the other hand, if we're working with a face stealer here, having Sayaka in fangirl mode around that could be a horrible miscalculation.

But how and why did that term become so commonplace HERE of all threads? I've never heard the term Shadowruns (plural, and used as a measurement of paranoia) outside of these threads.

Because Shadowrun is a setting that encourages paranoia to be safe, sometimes to absurd degrees, as well as overly-thought out plans when something simpler would suffice. And when the simpler plan IS tried, it fails due to unforeseen consequences.

You narrow your eyes at Pinky, before shaking your head as you disengage your Time Stop. Pinky gives you a shrug and a grin in return - the eldritchian horror's cackling fading in our ears just as she herself fades from existence, the world once more resuming its inexorable turning.

It's only being in this close proximity with the crowd that the wall of sound made by hooting, cheering fans hits you, very nearly rocking you back on your heels as you duck down beside Sayaka. She seems to notice you here, her eyes widening at you - before roughly pulling you down by your arm, her own hand clamping down on your wrist in a grip of iron.

"The fuck are you doing here, Murderface?!" She hisses into your ear. "You're supposed to be meeting the fucking contact! Godammit, are you screwing up the mission THIS early? Of all the--"

You tug your hand free from her grasp, before all but shoving the ticket in her face. The winning ticket, which she'd been leafing through her own ticket collection in search for. The ice-blue irises of her eyes shrinking into mere dots at the sight of it, her face going completely pale - before twisting back into its usual expression of venomous bitch.

"No. No fucking way. No fucking way HOW DID YOU GET THAT--"

It's your turn, now, to make her hunker down in discretion. Deepthroat gave it to you, just as the number was being listed off. Now, the way you see it, the principal just rigged her own contest to get you a cover - and a tissue-thin veneer of cover it is. You can either claim to be the winner on your own, or she can do it herself, seeing as she's got such a massive hard-on for the idol.

>>25600161

"...Wait, your contact GAVE you the winning ticket?" Sayaka snatches the ticket away from your hand, glaring at it, and then at you. You take a moment to blink - you didn't even see her hand move. She was that quick. "Okay, what's wrong with this picture? Any other principal, really, and I'd say this was a fucking trap. This is way too convenient." She looks back at the hotel, then back at you. "Granted, this is Ruri-sama we're talking about--"

...Ruri-sama, now. What kind of crazy fangirl is she, anyway?

"Focus, Murderface, focus," Sayaka growls. "I was gonna say that even if it's Ruri-sama we're talking about...I'd be careful about how you go about it. Me, I'd just give it to someone expendable and wait for the fireworks to happen."

She looks down at the ticket with no small amount of suspicion - and envy - before handing it back to you. You take it from her - or at least, you try to, but she's holding onto it.

"Mind, I'd love more than anything to win this contest of hers, but...well, you're the Warmaster. You're the one the principal wants. You decide." She lets go of the ticket with a self-satisfied smirk, although you can tell it's forced. "...Yeah. You decide, Murderface. But, hey, you've got someone expendable with you already, right?" The smirk turns into a grin, all too reminiscient of the one Pinky flashed you.

"Come on, who's the winner? Please, step forward!" The idol at the front calls into her megaphone. "Whoever has the winning ticket, come on and claim your prize! Ruri-chan is upstairs, waiting to receive your love over breakfast! Tax-free!"

What do you do?

Sayaka blinks at you, before her eyes narrow into slits. "You wouldn't."

You would, you smile at her, waving the ticket in front of her In fact, that portly, sweaty dude she elbowed in the face earlier might appreciate the ticket more than she would. Clearly he's the bigger superfan than Blueberry. He's even stopped crying from the pain, and is waving his I <3 Ruri banner as high as he can.

"No. You're not that stupid. You're--"

--the Warmaster here. You can be as stupid as you like - your predecessor, after all, did set quite the precedent.

". . ." Sayaka is silent as her eyes follow the ticket grasped between your fingers, mouth twisting into a tight little frown. Several moments of silence pass between the both of you.

No? Well, okay then. Her loss. You make to walk towards the otaku currently shouting himself hoarse over the crowd - before Sayaka all but tears the ticket from your grasp and charges her way into the throng, shouting all the while.

"I GOT IT! I GOT THE TICKET! I WIN!" The Eversor shrieks, and all eyes turn towards her. "WINNING TICKET, RIGHT HERE! Agh, get the fuck out of my face--" The last few words are uttered with a scathing disgust as she stiff-arms another portly otaku trying to push his way forward.

"O-oh! We have a winner, finally!" The idol, one with short yellow hair and a rather cute outfit styled from a schoolgirl PE uniform, smiles at Sayaka - and there's a fraction of a second that you see her smile falter, an expression of uncertainty flickering across her face. "E-er, congratulations! Can we get your name, please?" She greets Sayaka as the Eversor comes up on the platform, above the crowd, grinning from ear to ear.

"Miki Sayaka!" She says into the megaphone, all pomp and exuberance. "I've been a fan of Ruri-sama since her first album, 'The Magical Girl's Only Wish'!"

"Ah...haha! Well, I'm sure Ruri-chan would enjoy hearing about all of that!" The idol smiles, before turning away slightly, hurriedly speaking into her headset's mic. She turns back to Sayaka after a few moments. "A-and now, please, Ruri-chan is waiting! Our staff will escort you up to her penthouse, where the first day of your Four-Day Date with the most popular idol in the world is about to begin!"

You turn away, smirking, as Sayaka drinks it all up - the flashbulbs of the cameras, the envious yet congratulatory cheers of the crowd. You're not one for crowds like that, but...well, you at least could understand how some people would enjoy it.

After a few more photographs and inane questions, Sayaka is finally led deeper into the hotel - burly guards forming up at the entrance and barring all entry. The crowd clears after that, leaving pamphlets and posters littering the ground in their wake - and you, of course. You decide to light up as you waited, three cigarettes already smoked through by the time you're left alone.

...Well, at least you got Sayaka inside. That's what matters.

Now there's just the getting up there, too, that you have to take care of.

How do you get inside the Hotel?

You make directly for the entrance. The burly security detail, their lantern-jawed faces curling into sneers as you step closer, the unnatural bulges in the black suits they've been squeezed into all the more evident.

"Sorry, miss, but the Hotel's not taking any more occupants today." Their leader with the aviator shades and the curly-wire earbud, huffs at you. "Miss Kirishima's reserved the entire hotel. No unauthorized personnel either, so scram."

. . .You've got to be kidding.

You narrow your eyes at them, before stepping forward once more. You're not a goddamn fan, nor are you unauthorized. You're THE security detail. Chiaki Matsuda. Surely they've been briefed--

"Oh, really?" The ape laughs a rough, grinding sort of laugh, like a tank changing gears, turning to his other similarly-built simians for support. "Yeah, pull the other one. At least six other fuckers, calling themselves 'Ruri-sama's secret security guard' tried that earlier. Look, we're not stupid, and we're running sort of a bet here. The eighth fan who does the 'security detail' trick is going to get worked over, even if she's a cute girl like you." You have the suspicion that he's winking at you from behind his shades, making you that much closer to pulling out the Golden Desert Eagle and shooting his kneecap off. "You got lucky, now fuck off."

So the idol didn't tell her security detail about you. Which...explains a couple of things, namely the rigged contest.

Fuck.

You shove your hands into your jacket's pockets and step back, looking around. Furiously puffing on your cigarette, quickly reducing it down to the filter.

At the edge of your vision, you see what looks to be Deepthroat, waving at you from behind a couple of trash cans. She's looking...well, miserable.

What do you do, now?

You take one last look back at the guards, allowing yourself to scowl before walking towards the trash cans you've spotted Deepthroat peeking out from behind. You stop just right in front of them, though, seeing as you're still within sight of the guards. Like this, they'd just figure that you were simply looking for someplace to throw your spent cigarette into.

It's then that you hear it. A soft, feeble whimpering, of someone breathing through the mouth after the nose is stuffed up from too much crying.

"H-here. Come...come here. I'll take you through the b-back entrance." A moment more, and you see a Deepthroat-shaped shadow move from behind the trash cans, and into the nearby alley. "C-come on, hurry. Ruri-san is waiting..."

You follow the sniveling girl into the alley, both your footsteps echoing off the walls as you turn into a narrower one, where a heavy metal door is kept open by what looks like a...shoe. Deepthroat looks around furtively, before pushing against the door with both hands - shoving one sock-clad foot into the shoe and grunting with the strain.

"L-little...help, please?" She squeaks, and you blink as you move to help. It's...well, it wasn't that heavy of a door. You barely had to nudge it with the heel of your hand to push it all the way back. She gasps her thanks, and she ducks under your arm, stepping into the building.

...Wait, was she treading sock the entire time she got you to follow her? That's, uh...well.

As disconcerting as that is, you stay quiet as she leads you into what looks like the store room of the Hotel. The both of you walk past shelves full of canned food, linens and other miscellany, before coming to what looks like the service elevator - the doors already open, waiting for your arrival it seems. You spend a few awkward moments waiting for each other to step forward, before you finally squeeze into it at the same time.

Deepthroat murmurs something unheard into what looks like her own headset's microphone, and then the doors slide close. The elevator lurching under your feet as it makes its journey up to the penthouse.

You let out a sigh, letting the spent stub of your sixth cigarette drop down from your lips and onto the floor. You grind it out with the heel of your shoe a moment later.

Yeah. Nice start to the job, this.

...It's then that you hear it. Deepthroat's voice, sickly feeble, almost spineless in its quality.

"Y-you...why didn't you use the ticket? I...I gave you the ticket, you were supposed to use it to get to Ruri-san's suite..." A hiccup forms the involuntary punctuation to her already halting words. "How...how could I mess up something s-so simple?" She sniffs again, loudly this time, and you can't help but cringe at how wet it sounded. "Ruri-san's going to give me the box because of this..."

How do you respond?

You look down at the sweaty, shivering, crying girl in the elevator with you. She's...well, if there was someone who needed to have their kneecaps blown off for this kind of thing, it sure isn't this particular kid. You've got standards, for fuck's sake. It'd be akin to shooting a mangy puppy, already sick and senile with distemper. There's a special place in hell for people who'd even grin at the idea of that.

...And for some reason, she reminds you of yourself, somehow. Not in a cute, endearing way, but...a painfully-awkward way. A stuttering, shivering, socially-inept kind of way.

Reaching over with one hand to pat her on the shoulder - a gesture that she immediately recoils from, a full-body flinch that has her very nearly collapsing down to the floor on week knees - it's then that you tell her that it's not her fault. You deliberately went against the flow, here - and whoever planned this should have consulted with you in advance. Nobody is going to be put in any box, and you'll clear things up with Ruri herself if you have to."

It's then that Deepthroat looks up at you with her dark-ringed, bloodshot eyes, staring at you from a rather ragged and greasy mop of black hair. "R-really? You...you'd do that for me?"

You blink at this, before nodding slowly. Yes, you'd do that. It's not a problem.

...What's the 'box' she's talking about, though? Is it really that bad...?

"The...the box is..." Deepthroat swallows audibly at this, before shaking her head. Holding both hands over her ears. "N-no, don't make me say it out loud. It's horrible. A-and I'm not supposed to talk about it, a-anyway..."

...It must be that bad, then.

What kind of idol outfit is Kirishima Ruri running?

More and more questions, and you're not getting any closer to the answers.

The service elevator finally comes to a stop, and you step out into the penthouse floor - bringing back memories of a certain idol and how you rescued her from a certain Callidus. You could still see, from the walls, where they'd replaced the marble, the new tiles clashing with the old. The floors are quite disjointed in their repaired state, too, holes plugged in and painted over.

You stop at the door, and it's then you hear the unmistakable sound of Minase Iori reaching orgasm.

Followed a moment later by an unfamiliar female voice, also reaching climax.

"What's wrong?" Deepthroat asks beside you. "P-please, go ahead and knock. We shouldn't...keep Ruri-san waiting."

Oh, you should probably knock, yes.

But not after suppressing the sudden urge of really wanting to kill someone with your bare hands.

The street lights flashed by as Sleepy Sue weaved through traffic on the busy Toronto streets. Odette's leg tapped unconsciously as she sat on the floor, silently sharpening one of her spears. Mona was nearly hanging out of the armoured car's turret, shouting directions while her wet ponytail whipped around violently.

The busy sounds of traffic eventually melded into quiet suburbs with the occasional over-hanging lamp. It had been less than five minutes since they'd left the club, but Odette had enough sense to know that they were probably already too late. Soon enough, the car rolled up in front of the gated driveway of the Bernard home. Odette whistled as they pair jumped from the turret and stepped up to the wrought iron bars.

"Yeah, yeah. What's the plan?" Mona snapped.

"You head in the front. I'll circle around back," Odette whispered, trying to figure out a plan in her head. "Keep my number dialled on your phone. I'll try to find you if something comes up."

Mona nodded and, in a single bound, leapt over the stone fence around the lot. Odette quickly followed suit, disappearing into the darkness around the edges of the wall.

Mona fumbled with the key to the front door as she shoved it into the hole and gave it a hard twist. She'd never imagined that she'd be breaking into her own home. The past two days had seemed so surreal. Being offered a position in Valkyrie squad, teaming up with not one but two of the Seventeenth's warmasters and... having to chase down a killer after her father.

The house was deathly still as she stepped into the front hall. Not a single light seemed to be on in the entire building. The only sound was that of her own breathing and the steady thrumming of rain on the rooftops. It occurred to her that not a single thing was out of place. There wasn't even any water on the floor - which could only mean that the other girl hadn't come in through the front. For a moment, the tall Eversor almost believed that she'd gotten their early, that the psychotic she was hunting was too late. But of course, she was smarter than that.

How long had it been since Fubey first paid her a visit? She could never forget that day. He had been waiting with the warmaster outside of her highschool. "Good afternoon, Miss Bernard," he had said to her. "Would you be so kind as to give me a moment of your time?"

She'd just moved to the city back then. Jim Bernard had never been a terribly successful man. He jumped from job to job, always changing cities. Her mother had left them long ago, back when Mona was still too young to realize what was going on. "Mona, sweetie," her father had said, "I think this is the one! I'm gonna make your mother regret ever leaving us."

"I wish my dad's business could be successful," she had said to the incubator. "So we can live his dream."

A smell struck her as she put her hand on the door to her father's study. It was sweet, yet hateful. A smell that instinctively threw up all of the red flags in that primal part of her brain. With a turn of the knob, Mona pushed the door open and stepped inside. The study was much bigger than it had any right to be. Bookshelves lined the walls with old tomes that no one had ever bothered reading. A golden chandelier hung from the ceiling, unlit and still.

And there he was.

Slumped over his desk. Just like all the nights he had fallen asleep doing work. All the nights that were made worth it by his success. But as the metallic scent of blood rushed into her nostrils, she knew.

With a scream of "Daddy!" she rushed to his side. She could see the hole straight through his chest. Tears streamed down her face as she heard a sharp, girlish gasp from somewhere above her.

"You call him daddy?" An all too cheerful voice asked as the clinking of chains rang out through the room. "That's cute! You're cute! Gotta love a cool girl who gets all sweet and innocent~"

Mona spun around without a second thought, pointing her rapier outward. Fennel Vance hung upside down from the chandelier from her golden chain, a messy sea of dark hair hanging down further. A flash of lightning lit up the room for a brief moment and Mona could see the enormous grin plastered to the other girl's face as she swung back and forth.

"You... you killed my father," Mona growled.

"No shit," Fennel replied, leaping from her perch and landing back on the ground, golden chain in hand. "You aren't the one I'm looking for but," the Wolf held up one of her enormous hooks, gleaming in the moonlight and coated with fresh blood, "I could go for a little warm up."

Mona dashed at her father's killer, her teeth bared in a vicious snarl. Once, twice, three times her rapier clashed with Fennel's hooks in a shower of sparks. Her teeth ground together as she put all of her strength into the blows, each one deftly turned aside by the other girl. With a roar of anger, Mona kicked off the ground and performed an elegant pirouette, aiming to backhand the other girl with her buckler.

In a display of flexibility, Fennel leaned back to dodge the blow and cast her hook over the taller Eversor's shoulder. Mona glanced back, watching the hook tear through her father's books and crack through the shelves with ease. She remembered her opponent's presence a moment too late - turning her head only to have her vision obscured by the soles of Fennel's feet.

Mona tumbled to the ground, managing to catch her self only an inch before her head slammed into the marble floor. She heard a dull clinking just as a sudden pressure clamped around her ankle. A snort of laughter filled Mona's ears as she felt herself lift off the ground. It felt as though her guts were about to spill out of her mouth as she was jerked upward at speeds usually reserved for race cars and roller coasters.

Then she hit the ceiling.

A distinct crack sounded through the study as her whole body slammed into the marble. Mona groaned in agony. It felt as though she'd just been hit by a truck. However, the rush of adrenaline suddenly dulled that pain when the chain loosened.

A moment later, gravity worked its magic, slamming her back to the floor. Using her sword for support, Mona forced herself to her feet, unsteady as they were. It would take a lot more than that to keep her down. Or, at least, that's what she told herself.

"Alright, kid," Fennel sighed. "It's been fun. It really has. But if you don't stay down, I'm gonna have to stop goofin' off."

Mona rolled her neck and cracked her shoulders, giving her rapier a whirl in the air. "I'm-," she coughed violently and spat out a mouthful of blood, "I'm just getting started."

Fennel rolled her eyes and with a short huff, cast both ends of her chain into the ceiling, smashing through it with ease. The chains unfurled from a seemingly endless spool at the girl's feet, going on and on into whatever space laid beyond.

Mona took the opportunity to charge forward, holding her rapier up for an overhand slash. But she had underestimated her opponent. With a flash of brilliant gold, both ends of the chain shot back through the ceiling on either side of her.

She snickered. "You miss-"

Pain shot through her body.

Both hooks snapped back and tore into her. One went up through the left side of her ribcage, cracking bone and piercing organs. The other impaled her inner left thigh, easily ripping through the tender flesh. Mona screeched as both hooks pulled back in opposite directions.

Her leg went first. She felt it dislocate, then tear from her body as the hook pulled it back to the far side of the room. The rest of her went flying into the opposite wall before her world went black.

Fennel smirked, taking the opportunity to admire her own handiwork. The hooks detached themselves from the two pieces of magical girl before retracting back into her hands.

"Next?"

Odette never got a phone call, but after the scream she knew exactly what to do. She crossed the yard in a matter of seconds, leaping over hedges and gardens as she went. Her spear thrust into the soft ground as she vaulted up to the window, a sudden gust of wind catching under her cloak and sending her further upward.

She didn't even want to think about what she'd find on the other side of the glass. She'd been through this kind of thing far too many times to have any optimism left. Odette knew it'd be a lucky break if Mona was still alive.

The glass shattered as she tumbled through, holding her cloak over her face. The glass rang out as it hit the floor, an orchestral symphony heralding her arrival. The former warmaster dashed her cloak over her shoulders as she rose to her feet. Her pure ivory costume shone through the room as she took a deep inhale and her single eye scanned the surroundings.

The scent of blood hung thick in the air, but never did she wince or wretch even as her eye ran over the broken body of Mona Bernard.

"'bout time you showed up!" Fennel called out a sing-song voice. "I was starting to worry that you'd chickened out!"

"You killed Mona's dad?" She asked, her voice stern.

"Ayup!" Fennel's reply came in the same cheerful tone as she always seemed to use. "Real quick and painless! I'm a professio-"

"And you hurt Mona?"

This time it was Fennel who grew cold. "Don't interrupt me." She cocked her head back at the bigger part of the junior Eversor as a devilish grin curled her lips. "Wasn't so quick and painless for her. Hell, she still might be conscious!"

The one-eyed girl nodded. "Right," she muttered, her breath coming out as vapour.

The simplest explanation is that Ruri simply diverted Sayaka to wait elsewhere while her shenanigans started.

That's assuming something normal happened to her, though.

Odette seemed to disappear in a blur of white before Fennel's eyes. It was only the jingling of the chandelier that alerted her to the silver-haired girl's location, but by the time it reached her ears Odette was already gone. With a subconscious flick of her wrist, Fennel shot one of her arm-sized hooks at the hanging fixture.

The former warmaster was fast, Fennel thought to herself. Just as fast as she'd heard. It had been said that everything the Silver Lady lacked in brute strength she made up for with raw agility. The pale blur zoomed around the edges of the room, leaving ruined bookshelves in her wake where her spears had pierced the walls to act as hand-holds. Fennel's golden chains lashed and whip, a moment too late every time. All the while, the Wolf was forced to dodge hurled spears as she swung about on the chandelier.

In the blink of an eye, Odette seemed to disappear from the edges of the room. Fennel's neck craned just in time to see tiny, pale fingers wrap around her large collar and HEAVE her from her perch. She felt wood crack under her weight as she soared through the door and into the hallway. She prayed a silent prayer as she realized what a terrible mistake Odette had made.

The silver-haired stalked out of the room after her, a spear clutched in either hand. She let out a short snicker as she watched the other girl take off down the corridor.

"Running away already?" Odette called out. "I didn't even think we started yet!"

Fennel turned on her heel and leaned an elbow against the wall. "Come at me then."

Odette eyed the hall carefully. The other girl was twenty - no, thirty feet down. She could probably cover the distance in a matter of moments. But she knew better than that. She could see the predator pacing in the Wolf's eyes.

"Why don't you come here?" The one-eyed girl asked, her eyes narrowed.

"Ohoho! We got a clever one!" Fennel giggled and snorted in a most unladylike fashion. "What's Fennel got in store, I wonder? Hm? Come on, don't be shy!"

Odette tapped her foot nervously. She could take the bait. She could simply waltz down the hall like the other girl clearly wanted. Or maybe it was all a ruse. Maybe she was just toying with Odette.

"Hey, hey!" Fennel called out. "Little Mona, she called him daddy, y'know? Isn't that ADORABLE?!"

Odette released a short breath, halfway between a growl and a laugh.

"She sang like the rest! Right at the end when I ripped off her leg!" The Wolf's words came out dark and animalistic with a certain primal joy in her work. Odette had known a great many people like that - many of them fellow warmasters. "They all sing in the end. The Blessed Lady was so pleased! Only that ponytail girl gave in, though. Didn't need her by then anyways. Made a pretty penny off her soulgem!"

The one-eyed girl suddenly stopped, her foot still in mid-air. She could feel her hands growing colder. A chill ran up her spine as she felt the familiar sensation of icy cold right down to her bones. Under any other circumstance, she would fight it back. But not now. Now she needed it, as loath to admit it as she was.

Fennel blinked and Odette was already halfway down the hall. She was moving faster this time. Too fast. She propelled herself down the ice-covered floors using her spears as makeshift ski poles, bearing down . The air hung crisp and cold as the window panes cracked and popped while frost glazed them over. Fennel could see her own breath. And she grinned.

The chains slipped from her hands like a pair of serpents. They flew through the walls, dousing the corridor in a mist of plaster and wood splinters. The first shot out just behind Odette, close enough to knock her foot as she skated down the hall. A second burst out from behind a painting just ahead before crashing through the opposite wall. Soon enough the hall was filled with shining golden chains criss-crossing back and forth as they slid ever forward.

Still, Odette pressed on. Sparks flew as her spear collided with the chain still in Fennel's hands. It was a perfectly even match, Odette noted. Both were combatants were far better suited to mid-range fighting. All bets were off for this match; it was simply a matter of who had more aces up their sleeve.

Fennel took a quick leap back, which was swiftly answered by a javelin soaring past her cheek. The chains continued to pierce through the walls both in front and behind the two clashing titans, forcing them to duck and jump every other second. Ever more the chains flowed, ever forward through the ether from whence they came. The one-eyed girl couldn't even tell which part of the mansion they were in anymore. It all seemed to meld together as she pushed the Wolf through room after hallway after room.

The Wolf's retreat was suddenly blocked off as she felt her back hit a railing. With a grin, she realized that they'd made their way to the entrance hall, with it's sweeping wooden staircase, ornate Corinthian columns and enormous, gaudy chandelier. Her grin quickly vanished from her face as Odette's boot collided with her chest and sent her tumbling over the edge.

One of the hooks shot out and wrapped around the chandelier. Fennel cackled with pure, child-like glee as she spun around, riding it like a swing carousel. This time it was her foot that met the side of Odette's head - who had jumped up on the railing, ready to tackle the flying girl.

Odette was swept off her feet from the blow. Her hands desperately grasped at the railing for purchase as she fell, only one of them managing to get a hold as her spear clattered to the floor below.

With panic in her eye she reluctantly let go, dropping to the floor in a low crouch. Odette ducked as a hook flew past her head, hanging from the spinning chandelier. She quickly picked up her spear and batted a second aside as it swung by much too quickly for her liking.

Fennel hung upside down below the centre of the chandelier, striking acrobatic poses as she directed her hooks about like a conductor. The serpentine chains lashed and whipped at Odette as they passed, forcing her to block as her back was pushed up against one of the columns.

The Wolf had managed to work herself into a near-perfect defensive position. Odette's single blue eye flickered back and forth as she watched the hooks spin and lash out, scanning for an opening. It seemed that the space was only open for a single beat.

Odette took a deep breath. She only had one chance. She'd have to time it perfectly.

A hook lashed out at her. She grabbed it and heaved, stabbing her spear between the links and pinning it to the column. The chandelier jerked and tossed about as it suddenly started spinning in the opposite direction.

The second hook lashed out. Odette grabbed and yanked, placing the sole of her foot into the loop.

A third hook appeared from the corner of her eye, bursting from the checkered marble floor. It missed by inches as it wrapped around Odette's waist, winding her and sending her flying back against a column.

The one-eyed girl spat out a mouthful of blood as she rose to her feet. Ribs were probably broken. Organs might have been crushed. Definitely some internal bleeding.

"You have three," Odette laughed, leaning on her spear.

Fennel shook her head and the former warmaster was suddenly made aware of a delicate clinking behind her. A sudden spike of gold rose from below her field of vision in a spray of blood. She couldn't feel the pain. Only the sudden sensation of a foreign material piercing just above her heart. With a jerk, she felt it lift her off her feet, dangling her like a slab of meat in a butcher shop.

There was a light thud as Fennel dropped to the floor. A single golden chain ran from her hand and disappeared into the ceiling as she walked forward, running her hand up it. She ran a hand down Odette's cold cheek and whispered in her ear,

"I have four."

The wolf cackled as she pulled a syringe from behind her back and jabbed it into Odette's neck. The one-eyed girl's one eye slowly closed as her world turned black.

And that's a wrap! I'd like to give a big thanks to Wendy for helping nail this one down. Wouldn't have been nearly as good without her.

NOIR QUEST

You're a Magical Girl, and quite frankly, a hair's breadth from pulling out your gun and start shooting people. In their fat, stupid, perfectly-made up faces. Idol faces.

Fuck idols. Fuuuuck all of them.

Ever since you got back home and started being Warmaster, you've been having very bad days back-to-back.

There was that thing with Kharn's hat. Then, that thing with Iori, which you probably could have handled better but you tried your best with.

You're not even going to think about the box you got. Fucking boxes, you hate them now, and you'd always thought about getting gifts as something positive.

Now...well, Kirishima Ruri or whoever the fuck this idol thinks she is, it looks like she's doing her best to drive you up the goddamn wall, here. That, or get you to Witch out early, you don't know what.

For...for fuck's sake, she's having sex with Iori in her suite. IN THE PENTHOUSE SUITE, where the 765 Productions idol almost got raped in months ago.

Either the world has caught up with you and had decided to start fucking with you once again, or it's simply a portent to tell you that it's all downhill from here.

You have the sneaking suspicion that it's the latter.

Because nothing else would apparently get the world's cock hard enough other than seeing you suffer for something you've done that you have absolutely no memory of.

Kicking the door open is a terrible way to clear a room, leaves you fully exposed to return fire from anyone waiting in the room.

If the door is unlocked or we have some sort of key stand to the side of the door, open it, and slice the pie as we enter.

If the door is locked knock, stand off to the side in as hidden a position as possible prepared to assault whoever opens it, just in case.

If we break the door we'll have to move locations for the principal and that's annoying, or fix the door, which is even more annoying.

>"The...the box is..." Deepthroat swallows audibly at this, before shaking her head. Holding both hands over her ears. "N-no, don't make me say it out loud. It's horrible. A-and I'm not supposed to talk about it, a-anyway..."

What's in the box? What's in the box?
~~Deepthroat's head.~~
~~Ruri's the prophet and she sent the box with Fake Mami's head in it. She hypnotized one of her fans with a golden weapon and took her head without any struggle. Ruri's songs are laced with golden-weapon magic hypnotism, so everyone who's listened to her first album has already been hypnotized, and they're just waiting for a trigger phrase before they do whatever they were hypnotized to do. Said trigger phrase will be in whatever song she's singing the concert. By protecting Ruri, we are letting her enslave everyone who's listening, including magical girls.~~

How many shadowruns do we have regarding the concert now?

I think it's better from a writer's perspective this way, since Chiaki sure did have self-control issues before all this, and now that she's actually having her self control tested hard, she's going to fuck up.

I'd honestly say this way will at least make the story more interesting than someone that succeeds at everything they say they'd like to do with themselves.

I'm pretty sure kicking down the door won anyway.

She didn't change that much. And this is probably the most stress she's ever been under, and

Just as you raise a heeled foot to drive it right through the heavy teak door - it's then that you force yourself to slowly lower it, and then back away with just as much deliberation. Willing yourself to pace around in circles, both your hands moving to pull out a fresh pack of cigarettes from your inventory. A metallic snap, a hiss, and two cigarettes are now rapidly being burned down to their filters, your lungs filling with calming smoke.

...No. No. No, you're not kicking the door down. Focus. Kharn may have fucked around with your Soul Gem to make you immune to whatever it is the Golden Weapons do to its users, but Midori didn't pull you out of your own barrier just for you to go full Murderface on a client. You promised yourself that you wouldn't, unless they gave you exact reason to.

"Um...Miss Murderface?" Deepthroat tries to get your attention.

Not even when they're obviously trying to get a rise from you, doing everything they can to remind you of what you've done in the past. No, no, you're better than that. Better than that. Mami pushed for you to become Warmaster because she knew you'd grow into the role, and not become another Kharn.

You let the still-smoking stubs of cigarette filter fall down from your lips, and you start sucking on two freshly-lit ones even before they've hit the expensively-tiled floor.

Remember the whole
>"Well, there was that one time where a dead body was found that looked exactly like her, right when she was holding a concert. Found only a few miles from the concert grounds. They say it was some sort of cosplayer that got killed on the way to the concert, but the conspiracy theorists think an alien killed Ruri and took her place. That was forgotten about quickly, because she was right there, and a family quickly identified the corpse as a missing daughter

Sayaka mentioned that this happened two years ago, just when Ruri was starting a solo and she was supposed to be under the protection of the eighth offico at the time.

So either:

1. This is a read herring
2. Ruri got replaced under the eighth offico's noses
3. The eighth officio was actually involved in Ruri's replacement.

We got lots and lots of stuff to be paranoid about.

"Miss Murderface...?" She tries again, and it's here that you finally trust yourself enough to interact with someone without drawing a killshot bead on their skulls.

"The...the door's here, Miss Murderface," Deepthroat murmurs, a rather desperate smile curling her lips. "You...you were walking around in circles, and I thought you were confused..."

...What? She thought you were...what?

Does this girl really work for Ruri?

"Of...of course." The girl looks back up at you with her sullen, droopy eyes, blinking in rather wary surprise. "Is...is there something on my face? Do I have a booger hanging out--"

N-no. No. Er. Can she just open the door for you? You'd do it yourself, but...

"O-oh. Sure. Just let me..." Deepthroat seems to smile at this, and walks over to the door, one hand coming up to grasp the doorknob. She tries, fails, tries again, and then manages to do it with both hands.

"U-ugh. Haha. Er. M-my hands are a bit sweaty, haha..." the girl giggles to herself in a slow, rather sad sort of way. "S-sorry...please don't touch the doorknob, I'll clean it..."

"I-it's okay..."

It's like looking at a mirror. Then again, mirrors have always been much more entertaining than television.

We could contact the 8th in an official capacity, and cite the discovery of a head as the reason. With Ruri in town, we want to see if there's any similarities with the corpse from 2 years back, just to be sure.
Of course, that depends on if the 8th is on speaking terms with us after the last Incubator meeting.

It's here that you step through, finally. Bracing yourself for whatever it is they've been doing.

Well. It's...no, it's not what you expected.

The suite, as you remember it, seems to be have been completely redesigned from the bottom up - it's no longer the suite you defended Iori from a group of well-equipped otaku looking to get their jollies balls-deep in an idol.

You don't even see the set of chairs you stole your favorite chair from. It's a bit more like an old-fashioned suite, with velvet cushions, a shag tiger rug complete with the stuffed head, and expensive mahogany furniture all over. The floor's carpeting has also been replaced with rather tasteful marble. Probably so that inquisitive guests wouldn't see the bloodstains, the sort that never do come off of floors no matter how much you scrub.

But that's not what you're focusing on at the moment. It's...well, the scene you came into, the scene you'd planned on bursting into by kicking the door down...

They're not even on the fucking bed. They're sitting on the couch. Iori and...what you assume to be Kirishima Ruri, a rather gothically-dressed idol with long blue-green hair tied into two very long twintails. Seriously, they're draped down the couch cushions and touching the floor. Either she's been growing her hair for a long time or someone is making some serious bank providing her hair extensions.

She's...well. She's pretty. In a rather cute, priceless, expensive sort of way. But pretty enough to set your alarms off.

Blue eyes shouldn't glow that much. Not without magic, at least.

"Aha~! Chiaki Matsuda-chan, I presume?" She's holding what looks like a...script in her hands, and Iori, in casual clothes and a complete burning crimson from the neck up, is also hiding behind a similar script. The...the title of the script, printed in bold letters on the cover, is damnably familiar.

"You're just in time, we were practicing VA lines on my new project! Iori-chan was helping me out! Oh, and say hi to the folks watching our webcast!" ...Wait. What webcast?

"Say hi, Murderface," Sayaka monotonically cheers, giving you a rather limp wave with her free hand. She looks as though she'd be anywhere else BUT here. Gone is the fan fervor. Gone is the energy that saw her elbowing two fans three times bigger than her in the face.

This is a fucking global webcast going out to potentially millions of people who DO read MMxMM. This has the potential to not only reveal our identity, but also CONFIRM THE EXISTENCE OF MAGICAL GIRLS TO THE WIDER PUBLIC.

You narrow your eyes at the idol, before turning back towards the camera, breathing smoke from your nose. You give the glinting lens a glare, before grumbling something approximating a greeting at it - and it's then that you step out of the shot, making a beeline right for the couch that Sayaka's sitting on.

"Ah~? Oh, well, it seems Chiaki-chan's a bit camera-shy, everyone, but don't worry! You'll be able to see much more of her and Sayaka-chan too in the next few days, and they'll be right there with me at the concert!" The green-haired idol flashes the camera a cheerful, dazzling grin as you firmly plant your ass on the expensive cushion. Yeah, fuck everything about this job.

"Kill me now, Murderface," You hear Sayaka murmur to you, low and slow. Her voice low enough not to be caught by the camera's microphone, as the both of you continue to watch the two idols practice what sounds like a very frantic and heated scene between Miracle Midori(Ruri) and Murder Mayumi(Iori). Deepthroat is bustling quietly about, giving the camera an awkward, droopy smile as she tries her best to keep out of its range as much as possible, while unpacking what looks like a rather inordinate amount of luggage.

You've sufficiently clamped down enough on your anger to be surprised at what's happened to the Eversor. What happened to her energy, earlier? Is she under mind control, or something? Do you need to put her out of her misery?

"What? No. It's just...uh..." Sayaka shakes her head. "I...you know that saying, where you're not supposed to meet your heroes?"

Yeah?

"I met her. And..." Sayaka's shoulders droop even lower. "Man. I just...I just don't wanna talk about it, Murderface. Not with you, sorry. But I wish I never got into the fucking car with you."

...Well. That's...this is the first time you've felt bad for Sayaka.

What about this webcast thing, though? Was this part of the contest?

"Fans," Sayaka murmurs. "Real fans."

"N-nhh! M-Mayumi-san, that's...! If you do that, I'll go crazy...!" Ruri wails, one hand even coming up to her cheek for effect, her breathing hard. Iori herself is trying not to look at Ruri, while attempting to deliver her lines with the same kind of enthusiasm.

"She's just...she's just not who I expected, Murderface." Sayaka murmurs hollowly. "I wanna go home."

This is why Ruri wanted us as a Bodyguard. Its supposed to be a PR-Stunt. MMxMM is hugely popular right now, Ruri got a job offer for VA work for it months ago, when Iori told her about us she figured that while we may not be Murder Mayumi (HUE!) we resemble her darn close when it comes to behaviour and character. While we will be around she has some free PR thanks to Chiaku being a MurderMayumi lookalike.

Soon as we get the camera turned off we should grab her by the collar, get right up in her face, and ask her what the FUCK she thinks she's doing.

I know this seems like a troll suggestion, so let me go through my reasoning:
If she IS an android, we'll be able to tell from how heavy she is.
If she IS a magical girl, she'll break free.
If she DOES have a golden weapon, ~~[x] THE FLESH OF FALLEN ANGELS~~.
If none of these things is true, we intimidate an arrogant civilian who thinks she can just treat the Warmaster of an Officio Assassinorum like some sort of toy. We deal with reality-breaking monsters on a daily basis, a prissy idol bitch is literally nothing in comparison.

I'd expect that to be kind of expected, what with our contract to escort Ruri during one of her biggest concerts ever. The 24-hour webcast I'll grant you, but since we're supposed to be escorting an idol during a very public concert, and not just keeping her safe in a hotel and then to the airport like with Iori, I'm fairly certain that QB expected a higher than normal profile on this contract.

I mean, really, we're going to be an escort for one of the biggest idols at her concert and you didn't expect us to be photographed by hundreds of rabid fans?

You reach over, and...drape your arm over her shoulders, giving her a quick squeeze. On any other day, in any other situation, you'd have shoved your arm into a woodchipper instead - it'd have the same exact result, and would probably be a lot less painful. But right now...well, you're just not used to Sayaka being this way. You're supposed to be the sad sack of the team, not her. It's wrong, unnatural, and all your fault.

And you're so, so sorry.

"Christ, don't apologize. You're going to make me cry." Sayaka mutters, with the tones of a child that's just been told that Santa Claus isn't just nonexistent, he's also dead. "Well, if anything, at least I know what I'm doing when the mission's over."

What's that?

"Taking my entire collection of Ruri memorabilia and burning it." The Eversor lets out a sigh that sounded more like a week-old balloon pitifully deflating. "Just...everything."

Now, come on. You're not well-versed in this sort of thing, but isn't that a bit excessive?

"No." Sayaka shakes her head, mournfully. "It really isn't--"

There's a knock on the door, stopping the action inside the suite cold. Both you and Sayaka turn towards it, you with a hand straying inside your jacket, the Eversor immediately aiming the camera. Deepthroat, very loudly, drops a heavy-looking piece of luggage on her foot as Ruri calls her to open the door - and the short, sweaty assistant limps the entire way, squeaking in pain with every other step.

One of the plates is already stacked with an foot-high stack of pancakes. The other plates are, predictably enough, filled with western breakfast food. Bacon, sausages, eggs, toast.

...Just how much does she know?

"..R-right away, Miss Ruri..." Deepthroat's tremulous reply is faint as she hobbles towards Sayaka, sleeve-covered hands held out to receive the gadget. Sayaka gives her a small frown, before placing the camera in her hands, which is almost immediately dropped had it not been for the Eversor's quick reflexes.

"Hold onto it a bit more tightly, jeez," Sayaka mutters, and the extent in which you've damaged Sayaka just hit you right there. She didn't even bitch at Deepthroat (now Noriko). It was...yeah. Your partner in this case is severely compromised. You'll have to take her drinking after this.

All four of you manage to sit around the table, in your respective places, with you facing the stack of pancakes. ...Well, of course it's for you. Otherwise the butter on the uppermost pancake wouldn't be styled into a desert eagle lying on its side, gently melting.

This idol. This fucking idol.

"Ah, so, Sayaka-chan! How are you feeling right now?" Ruri is all smiles, all excitement, annoyingly chipper. "Hee, I know you want to know more about the anime Iori-chan and I were practicing lines for earlier, but sorry, that's still a secret! Right?" She winks at the camera, and you could swear stars and glitter exploded in the air as she did so.

Iori, sitting beside you, is firmly keeping her gaze down on her food. Just poking at it with her fork, pushing stuff around on her plate. Apparently just as uncomfortable with things as you are.

"Ah, and everyone, please meet Chiaki-chan! She's the best Murder Mayumi cosplayer there is, bar none! She'll be performing up on stage with me in the concert, along with Sayaka-chan here!" Ruri finally turns from the camera to address you, while Deepthroat moves around for a better angle.

"Ah, can you tell the fans a bit on how you've worked on looking like a very S, very violent, and maximum ero-ero magical girl?" Ruri smiles at you, widely and innocently, and you hear Iori gently choke on her orange juice.

How do you respond?

Technically true, we could. We could let Sayaka suffer here on our behalf.

Ruri either is a golden weapons holder, or managed to get the almost-rape video of Iori (which is where she saw the golden deagle of course).

We can get out of here quite easily by just faking a phone call and saying "Ah, a family emergency came up", then just stake out the place OUTSIDE the room

Later on we can tell Kyubey Sayaka was able to handle client interaction while we took a more outer aspect of the job.

A thought:

People watching the livestream are expecting Chiaki to act like Murder Mayumi and to generally not steal the show from Ruri. Nor does Ruri expect anything but this show to go the way she dictated so she can milk all the publicity this is worth and also establish her power over those participating.

Instead of going along with the role, what would happen if Chiaki instead acted vastly out of character and started stealing the show away from Ruri? Like instead of acting all growly and stoic, Chiaki started channeling Moemura Mode x 1000 (or going full Brian Blessed)? While Ruri's fans are all obsessed with her, there's something to be said with exploiting the demographic which may certainly be into ~moe stuff, or just upstaging the entire thing.

It seems to me that there are a considerable amount of people (or a smaller number of very argumentative people) whose approach seems to be "I am the Warmaster, and you will OBEY ME. This is all beneath me! ALL OF YOU SHALL! SHOW!! THE PROPER RESPECT!!".

I partially agree, but sometimes I think that course of action would show that Chiaki has let the position get to her head. I'd be more in favor of beating Ruri at her own game, or subtly sabotaging the camera or somesuch. Ruri is probably the Queen Bitch of all the idols, who probably deal with the vicious politicking and rumormongering and mudslinging that celebrities deal with on a daily basis. Even moreso in what appears to be a cut-throat industry. She isn't going to be cowed or truly intimidated by any displays that Chiaki shows. In fact, I wouldn't be surprised at all if she's planned for this sort of outburst of anger/RESPECT MUH AUTHORITAH that these participants are advocating.

We're going to either have to beat her at her own game, or find some way to go around it.

Because even the best of players will be influenced by out-of-character information, and if you want players to play in-character it's most effective to give them only what is known in-character?

Do you get mad at the DM for not telling you what you didn't see when you fail a spot check? It's the same basic idea -- Decu told us what Chiaki took away from the files, not the full actual contents. It's a perfectly reasonable method ensuring more immersive in-character play.

Chiaki might not be a complete utter genius, but she's still someone who shadowruns for a living. Hell, even when a "normal" magical girl she set up a deathtrap that could have killed a large tank division and planned out everything meticulously. Being able to read a damn mission briefing correctly shouldn't be that hard.

Even if Chiaki fucked up reading it, though, that doesn't mean we'll be remotely detonated because a client cries that we didn't fingerfuck her on-camera. As long as Ruri survives to pay up, QB's not going to give a shit. And if Ruri doesn't survive that's either going to be because she's the enemy or we had bigger problems, so we don't give a fuck then either.

3 Don't say a word. Just eat.

3 "I get into the mind of character that Green-Green created. It's not always easy, because sometimes it feels like there's four of us, but at least three can agree on the pancakes. The voice required a lot of practice."

4 Try to hate them into a fine mist.

1 "It was a struggle at first, but soon everything just feel into place. It feels like Murder Mayumi was made for me"

6 "Miss Ruri, you seem to have things mistaken. You have hired me for bodyguard services. I am not, going to and never will, perform on any stage with you. I'm playing along with this cosplay shit, but that is the very limit of my patience."

1 vote specifically for not doing the thing right above this

1 "Huh. And here I thought an idol would know how it is to have an overeager fan making porn of you. Consider me surprised."

1 "I didn't. I'm a personal friend of the author. She based the character on me. The magical girl parts... eh, that's just her."

Unfortunately that is not the case.

As per knowledge as told by the 10th Dickbutt, information on warmasters is posted publicly. Whether this is only restricted to warmasters + Incubators or includes a select circle of Top Clients is still unknown.

What we also know is that Iori had been talking to Ruri about us for quite some time. It is possible that she might have had knowledge about Chiaki as being the next warmaster and thus specifically requested for her.

Of course this is but one interpretation of the circumstances.

What I'm worried about is the disturbing amount of details that Ruri knows about Chiaki.

MMxMM is reasonable.

Hotel setup is suspicious, but still reasonable.

Knowing about pancakes could be coincidence or simply seeing Matsuda at a western-style breakfast restaurant, but still registers as pretty suspicious.

Knowing about the Deagle gives off at least 2 Shadowruns.

Though she is just an idol, she is also rich and influential and LOVES to throw her weight around. I have a suspicious feeling that she may be the one behind hiring/funding those Otaku who videotaped and orchestrated Yayoi's internet debut, as well as those who attempted the same thing on Iori.

All it would take is one of them hanging back to observe (or another camera installed somewhere) to know about Leg-shooting and Golden Deagle.

Since Iori is here, It's probably her recommendation that got Chiaki the contract, so all Ruri knows about Chiaki is from Iori.

The contract was set purposely vague to give us/them a little leeway for 'fun' stuff (Idol shenanigans).

Poor Sayaka, Chiaki should note to tell her to sell the stuff instead of destroying it like that Aya Hirano fan did. Get a pure breed dog from the money. (Dog debate go!).

Possible. But given her propensity for antagonizing other idols and perhaps narcissistic personality (this is kind of stretching the extrapolation from her actions here), it could be more likely that she's using this to crush Iori while getting her kicks over manipulating Chiaki. She wants to feel like she's in control here, and has spared no expense in getting information about Chiaki and Iori's relationship.

While eldritch horrors and rogue meguca powered by eldritch gilded weaponry are certainly dangerous... there's also something to be said from a clever/driven/cunning individual who has ridiculous amounts of money, PR, and connections.

That's just your interpretation, which doesn't really have any bearing on the problem.
This is a measure put in place to prevent the miscounting that happened. If we don't stick by it, then what's the point of even having it?
We'd be right back in the same situation as before (though at least we'll have a time limit), and the same problem could happen.

I think the point with the [x] is that it's not like the vote is invalid without it, but you're not allowed to complain if your no-[x] vote gets overlooked as a simple mistake. It's not so much "votes without an [x] only count when Decu feels like it", but rather "votes without an [x] count so long as Decu notices them, and if he doesn't see them then too bad, should've marked them with an [x]".

Seeing as that's the whole point of the [x] in the first place -- to make votes easier to sift out from the general chatter.

Here's how I see it: If it's a vote for something it's counted as a vote. I use context to determine whether something is a vote, and almost all of them either link back to the original post or link to another vote which is easy to read. It's not actually very hard to do. Takes at worst ten minutes, if everything's a write-in and people's opinions are scattered.

But this person has a rather large amount of experience with firearms, so no, they would not confuse the two.

There is a very large difference between a gunshot and a cork going off, not the volume, but the length of the sound, the intensity and 'impact' if you will.

If it was someone who had never experienced either? it would be understandable, but not really for chiaki

It's to be said that you've dealt with the rich and powerful before. People with too much money and too little sense, people who make a living doing nothing but have other people work themselves to death in cubicle farms for them.

Suprisingly, only a handful had really given you that itch to give them a Vindicare makeover on the spot. Most of them had simply been clueless, sheltered folk oblivious to how the world outside of their money nest actually worked and toiled. Some had even been nice to you, just hardworking folk who'd managed to get into new money and were simply trying to protect themselves from the sudden appearance of long-lost friends and relatives looking for a cut. Harmless, to an extent.

But Kirishima Ruri, the most powerful and successful idol in the world - and your current principal - seems to be doing her utmost best into tempting you into reducing her pretty little face into a ragged, fleshy hole you can put your entire arm right through.

It's not just orchestrating the world's worst cover for a bodyguard by rigging a contest her fans were screaming themselves hoarse for. It's not just creating a convoluted setup that took you completely by surprise, someone who's supposed to be trying her best to make sure she doesn't get killed or raped or both. And it's certainly not just her being petty enough about you mucking up her plan - sending Sayaka in as the sacrificial lamb instead of yourself - that she even had Iori, of all people, rehearse with her a script involving magical girl lesbians fucking each other.

No, it's all of those, all wrapped up neat and tidy with this...twenty-four hour webcast thing that's going on at the moment, delivered via a camera wielded by a sweaty, narrow-shouldered bundle of inferiority complexes and eyebags and hair that could stand to be washed a bit more thoroughly.

This is being Warmaster? This is what Kharn dealt with in a daily basis?

This isn't worth the office, or the apartment, or the hat. It's not even worth the tiny pleasure you take from seeing Sayaka squirm every time she sees you and knowing that if you told her to jump, her first immediate reply would have to be 'how high' - and any variation of 'fuck you Murderface' would be the second.

If it weren't for the fact that...that Mami is counting on you, then...well, you don't know what you'd do. Quit in a huff, probably. Hand in your resignation, cash in everything, and hunt witches on your own. Just leave.

There are also other reasons, you suppose. There's Midori, who you have to take care of. Misaka, who you've heard is getting courted by other Officios to head their R&D staff. And Kyoko, who you're frankly worried about sometimes, what with her being so fucking nice and trusting that you half-expect her dying by sacrificing herself for someone she doesn't even know.

...Shit. That's a lot of reasons.

Well, if anything, you've got a lot to lose if you start fucking up again. Including your temper, if this idol doesn't stop testing you.

As you consider the foot-high pile of pancakes in front of you - the butter desert eagle on the uppermost pancake slowly and gently melting into the syrup - it's with as much blinding hate you can muster that you swivel your gaze at Ruri, and the girl holding the camera beside her. You focus your entire being into willing the handheld broadcasting device to explode, and to have a shard of its camera lens spear off and bury itself deep into Ruri's soft, mushy brain. No doubt Deepthroat's hands would be reduced to useless, bloody twigs of splintered bone, but them's the breaks.

Of course, that doesn't really happen. Instead, you play along with the new cover she'd given you - that of being a Murder Mayumi cosplayer. You grumble something about how it simply comes as second nature to you. You thought they'd be satisfied with the answer and get you out of the camera's line of sight, but apparently you're still in the limelight. Ruri's smile turning into a grin.

"...And get that fucking camera out of my face before I shoot it," You find yourself growling, before you could stop yourself. Deepthroat visibly shakes at this, the camera rattling in her hands, and she probably would've fallen back had it not been for Ruri steadying her with a hand.

"Hee! That's definitely Murder Mayumi-chan, all right! See, viewers? That's how Chiaki-chan takes cosplaying seriously! It's an entirely new level, super maniac rank S-S-S!" Ruri giggles here. "But don't worry, you'll see her a lot in this webcast, and also in the concert, so stay tuned! And now, a word from our sponsors!" She nods at Deepthroat, who then presses something on the camera and lowers it.

"Whew. Finally." The idol lets out a sigh, rolling her shoulders. "That was rough." She turns towards her sweaty personal assistant. "How was I, then?"

"G-green..." Deepthroat murmurs, her eyes wide. "Very...very green, Ruri-sama."

"Really?" A grin curls soft, perfect lips. "What kind of green?"

Deepthroat takes a step back at this, stuttering all the while. "W-what kind? Uh...um...F-forest Green. Emerald. Viridian. A-any...any kind of green you want, Ruri-sama..."

"Aww. You're too nice to me, Noriko." She reaches over with a perfectly-manicured hand and pats the short, sweaty girl on the shoulder, before carefully wiping that hand with a tissue. "Now, please take Sayaka-chan to her room next door. Iori-chan, please accompany Sayaka-chan for the moment, as I need to speak with the Warmaster of the Ninth personally. I'll decide how long you get to stay in the box after that."

"Mrnf?" Sayaka grunts, looking up from her plate quizzically - chewing rapidly and then swallowing, she repeats her muffled query. "W-what? But I'm not even done eating! I skipped breakfast getting here--"

"Just go, please, Sayaka-chan?" Ruri says coolly, but it's Iori who finally manages to make the blue Eversor relent. It's a good thing, too - you saw how Sayaka's free hand had reached down to her waist, as if to pull a weapon from underneath the table. Reflex, probably. You'll have to thank Iori later.

"...Please be careful, Chiaki-san," Iori murmurs as she passes you by, Deepthroat ushering both her and Sayaka out the door. With a click, you're now left alone with Kirishima Ruri - who had now taken this time to unpack a particularly suspicious-looking piece of luggage. One that's long, and heavy from the looks of it. She undoes the locks, throws it open - and you could smell a faint hint of gun oil even when you're almost facefirst into a pile of pancakes.

Well. First time you've heard of an idol packing heat. Major heat, seeing as the customized sniper rifle she's now carefully assembling on the bed is almost nearly as big as the Anzio that Misaka used for ventilating Kirika.

...She's pretty good with assembling the damn thing, you note. It's a rather huge beast of a rifle, with the words 'Love Story' lovingly engraved into the body and stock. The scope itself has a rather cute-looking bright green ribbon tied around it.

"You'll have to forgive the mess. Noriko-chan is woefully slow about unpacking, and I end up having to do most of it myself." The idol suddenly says, apropos of nothing. "Why aren't you eating your pancakes? Aren't they your favorite?"

How do you respond?

>Land the voice-acting part for the newest popular yuri manga OVA
>Know an idol who knows the girl that the doujin was based on
>Learn this girl (who has recently actually been promoted to the head of her office/agency) is a bodyguard/assassin for hire
>Decide to hire her as a bodyguard; she DID successfully guard Iori through two things most others might have died too
>As a bonus, this could serve as a PR thing too, because she's like a Murder Mayumi cosplayer!
>Offer to pay Kyubey lots of money for the trouble.

Seriously, all this seems perfectly reasonable to me... I'm just not getting why people think that what Ruri did was unusual or out-of-bounds in some way.

Seriously, it's just... Gah. She spends a lot of money to hire a bodyguard who would also hang out with her; and this gets her both a, well, bodyguard but also a PR boost to the upcoming video she'll be doing voice-acting for.

The problems are twofold.

1. She knows an awful lot about us. We've only been the Warmaster for a very short period of time, and she seems to understand our ways and interests in guns and pancakes, and her bringing us to the very hotel, and the very ROOM that Iori was attacked in, on top of bringing in Iori in particular, and also the MMxMM thing we're attached to.

There are a LOT of VERY CONVENIENT things being set up here, and it's suspicious, in addition to the fact that we still have no idea what her motive is.

2: She's been a jerk with the mission itself, in the fact that she has tossed us the curveball of the rigged contest with no warning or prior discussion. Throwing us into strange scenarios with nothing ahead of time, and in very public places, isn't a very good way to treat your security detail. In addition, 24/hour webcasting is still a pretty big step above what we were expecting, which was probably more along the lines of "Probably stay inside most of the time where we'd have breathing room, but still go out on dates and events".

>I think it started when the "have a good time with the Ninth Warmaster" was connected to the "I'm gonna steal Chiaki away from you Iori" thing. That kind of put a negative tint on things.

Okay, though... I think we'd broken up with Iori, like, before we even left for Siberia. The "steal her away" thing might have been Ruri making a joke -- or being a bitch to Iori.

>Then she tried to fuck with us in the competition.

Iori did mention that Ruri came to her in her time of need after the near-rape incident. If you'll recall, she even went shopping with her for the Butler and Maid uniform used in the massacre. She talks alot about Chiaki during this period and it is very likely that this is the source of intel on our likes and dislikes. She probably even knows about Mami's pancakes. Everything else has been shown to Iori at some point or the other too. As for MMxMM, its a pretty famous series at this point. Anyone could have spotted the more than passing resemblance. We should begin ringing the alarm bells IF she IDs Green Green, though.

The second bit can be explained as Ruri going on a power trip. Shes amusing herself with the things she can do and obviously enjoys the idea of us and Iori dancing in her palm.

I think we're forgetting the name of the idol's first album, 'A Magical Girl's Only Wish'. There's a chance she's known about magical girls for quite some time, possibly before QB contacted her. She's either known for quite some time, is one herself or is damn close to someone who is one. It's a little too specific to be swept under the carpet.

To get this popular, she's going to have to have been around for a while, no? Or do we have a time scale on that and I've missed it somewhere?

Um...

The thing about "non-obvious bodyguard", um... it was to hide the fact that there was a bodyguard...

Sigh -- look, I know she'll have some obvious bodyguards and security too.

But what I was saying was that the "contest winner" or "Murder Mayumi cosplayer" would be let mean that she could have a bodyguard close to her that people would not REALIZE is a bodyguard.

As in, somebody tries to get to her, and then BAM! the cosplayer hits 'em when they're not expecting it.

I didn't mean anything about a "Do people know about Magical Girl bodyguards or not" sort of thing...
I just meant it in the much more straightforward, simple, and CONVENTIONAL meaning of "a convenient and plausible explanation for why a new girl is suddenly hanging around Ruri 24/7."

Right, but I believe Iori was isolated(ish) in a hotel room -- whereas Ruri has a webcam on her 24/7 for a while. So we'd have attention on us much like when we brought Chiaki to that gathering/party/meeting.

The box could be something fairly innocuous that Ruri doesn't even think is a punishment that Spaghetti associates with her inferiority complex. If she has a leak that is capable of intercepting a contract request to an Officio Assassinorum, then sending the contract in the first place will be enough to send up every red flag ever.
All she would achieve by failing to inform us is jeopardising the mission.

Now, if someone intercepted the contract and REMOVED that information, then I can understand. But that would raise a shitton of questions with QB and probably through the entire fucking system for a loop.

You give the tantalizing tower of pancakes sitting right in front of you, before pushing the plate to the side a bit. Honestly, with all that's happened lately, you're not feeling all that hungry. Thirsty, maybe, but looking at the spread, there's no iced water to drink, only orange juice. And you don't do orange juice.

"Ice...water?" Ruri blinks as she looks up at you, her hands momentarily pausing in their fluid assembly of a weapon that could probably kill God if she could draw a bead on him with it. "Not whisky? Well, er...I suppose I could get Noriko to get you some--"

No. No, she doesn't need to go to the trouble. But speaking of Deepthroat, though--

"Deepthroat? Who's..." Ruri's brow furrows momentarily, before smoothening out as she smiles. "Ahaha~! Oh, I almost forgot about her codename. Yes, what about her?"

...Cute. Anyway. You wanted to make clear that it wasn't her fault that Ruri's little stunt with the contest didn't work out the way she planned it to. The snag was your idea - and she doesn't need to go into any box or whatever. Jesus, give the kid a break. And maybe some deodorant. And a long shower.

"Oh, is that so?" The idol's smile is a rather cheeky one as she continues to work on the intimidating rifle, the metal parts clacking and snapping, a staccato cacophony as they are fitted together by perfectly-manicured fingers. "Well, I kind of knew you wouldn't go along with it. Chiaki Matsuda - or rather, Murderface-san - doesn't bow down to fate all too easily. You'd have viewed it as an insult, probably, a spoiled brat of a boss that likes to throw her weight around simply because she's got enough money and clout to." Her smile turns into a mischievous grin. "Am I right, or am I right?"

Fuck. She's got your number, there. Fine, you admit it. But why this? Is she trying to seduce you, piss you off, or both? Last you heard, you're being hired as security detail. What's with all...this? And what's with the rifle?

It's here that she looks...well, offended. "Really? Chiaki-chan, I'm the top-selling idol in Japan - and in the world. I've been on the cover of Rolling Stones five times. All my records have gone multiple platinum. You don't --" Ruri stops here, her cute pouty frown turning into another smile. "...you have no idea whatsoever why I hired you, do you?"

No. No, you don't.
"Hee. Well, I suppose I'm not that famous yet, seeing as the legendary Murderface hasn't even heard of me." It's then that she clears her throat, and starts singing.

You're not at all into idol music. You think the bulk of it is designed to be as shrill and annoyingly-squeaky as possible, in order to reach some sort of hidden frequency that resonates with the part of the human brain that likes horrible music sung by scantily-clad, barely-legal girls. You're not a fan, is what you're trying to get at, here.

But Ruri, after singing only a few bars of a song you've never heard of, had...well, taken you. From an uppity idol bitch that desperately needed a punch in the gut and another in the kidneys, she'd transformed into a young woman who absolutely had no idea what she was getting into, and yet just wanted for the boy she liked to like her back. A girl that had no idea she'd be fighting horrible monsters until the day she died - and only wanted to feel the warmth of a hug before she did.

Her impromptu recital ends after a slow, mournful note, and she opens her eyes, a blush blossoming on her cheeks.

"I sing about Magical Girls, Chiaki-chan. Yes, yes, I know the world's not supposed to know about you yet." The idol smiles. "Don't worry, I'm not trying to expose you or anything - I doubt I'd be taken seriously, anyway, what with the current market inundated with magical girl anime and spinoffs. I'd probably be accused of viral marketing another project."

...Well, alright, but that doesn't explain--

Ruri looks at you pointedly, before shaking her head. "Seriously? No, you're kidding, right? ...Oh, fine. Besides how awesome the PR of having a dead-to-rights Murder Mayumi cosplayer in my webcast, Chiaki-chan, I also wanted to know more about the most notorious Magical Girl in the world, more notorious than Valnikov Kharn ever was."

You blink at her in silence, and she takes that a sign to continue. "The contest? I wanted to see how you'd react. I wanted to get under your skin, see what made you tick. I want to write a song about you, about the Magical Girl who isn't afraid to wade into blood and get her stockings and costume caked with gore. I want to write a song about the Magical Girl who fights like she's got nothing to lose, yet walks as if she's got the entire world on her shoulders."

What about the gun, then?

"What, this?" She looks down at the rifle on her lap. It's almost fully assembled, save for the magazine. You narrow your eyes at it, and Ruri catches your gaze. She giggles, and shows you that it's empty. "calm down. I never bring ammunition to a concert. And this is a family heirloom - I take it with me and clean it to calm myself down. It's also my good luck charm, see?" She fingers the ribbon tied around the scope.

Huh. Well.

How do you react?

I fail to see why we would be THAT famous. I get it that we were well-known in our officio because we killed an awful lot of people in a short span as Girl A.

But I fail to see how we should have an awful lot a fame beyond that.
Especially because the general population doesn`t even know about Magical Girls.

Kharn and Kirika, since they had a high killcount, Mami because of her unusual kindness for a Meguca, even some of the other Warmasters since they are batshit insane. But Chiaki? Not really. I don`t believe that killing 18 Eversors is such a big deal if Kharn probably killed and fucked way more than that. probably even at the same time.

We've killed many more than 18 Eversors, and for a time Murderface was a part of Kharn's entourage, meaning she came along when Kharn visited other Officios.
Also, QB said that no one, no other Magical Girl, had the perfect Time Stop ability that Murderface had, making her very unique and valued. So that would be another reason why our fame would spread beyond just the Japanese Officio's.

And also, being in the industry the lines of communication are very short and well-networked.

Fine. You'll...accept those answers for now. But before you get back into being her paid grunt in a Magical Girl costume, you want some answers, and she'll give them or else you walk.

"Haha~ Sure, sure, ask away! I'll do my best to answer all of Chiaki-chan's questions!"

...Right. Well. About Iori--

"Yes, I know it looks a certain way," Ruri cuts you off even before you've gotten a sentence in edgeways. "But we were looking for a Murder Mayumi VA, and Iori-chan seemed to be a perfect fit. We thought about getting Kikuchi Makoto-chan first, of course, but she turned us down." She pouts, here. "You have no idea how relieved I was when she sent in her audition tape! And she hit it right out of the park, too!"

Alright. That's...you'll have to talk to Iori about that, later. What about this 'good time' thing that she specifically asked you for--

"That's a se-cret~!" Wink. Stars and glitters coming out of fucking nowhere. Victory sign.

...Really?

"Oh, don't look like I'm going to drug you and rape you, or something," Ruri pouts again, and you could see how she could reduce any man - and woman - to putty with that pout. "Good time! A fun time! I want to get to know you better, Chiaki-chan, not ruin my career by getting involved with a Magical Girl!"

If that's the case, then why did she tell Iori all that stuff--

It's here that her upbeat pace and tone suddenly gets taken down a notch, and Ruri looks back at the door. "I...well, consider it a small favor in advance, from me to you, Chiaki-chan." It's here that she stands up from the bed, the rifle in hand - and it's with a reverent air that she places the long, beastly weapon on a rack, planted up against one of the walls of the suite. Her fingers tracing the engraved writing on the rifle. "I know, I know, I look like a massive superbitch and whatever I do, that's not going to change. But Iori-chan...she was really into you, Chiaki-chan. Almost unhealthily so. I...I guess I wanted to help her dial it back a bit." She turns back towards you. "So I did it the only way I knew how."

By...being a massive superbitch?

"Ding ding ding! Tell the audience what we've got for Chiaki-chan, Johnny!" Ruri does a little hop and skip, clapping her hands, her long twintails bobbing up and down. "You got it in one! And no, I don't mind if she hated me in the bargain, as long as she realizes how bad an idea it is to fall in love with a Magical Girl." It's here that her smile fades, somewhat. "It's the worst thing an idol can do, and one she may not live long enough to regret."

Oh. Um. Well. An awkward silence falls over the room, once more.

This Ruri person. She's...well, you're still suspicious, but she's turning out rather alright. She's at least convinced you halfway that shooting her in the face may not be a good idea.

You clear your throat, and you think about a change in subject.

Because those two combined -- if you really, truly, honestly believed you were in as big of an illusion as last time -- say "Shoot yourself in the head to get out of the illusion" AND "... and if you're wrong about being in an illusion, it's not such a big deal."

But that's not what I think at all.
I think if QB says 'It would be a good PR opportunity' we can say 'Don't wanna'.
If he says 'You are doing a PR op. Behave.' we say 'ur a dickbutt but you feed me grief seeds so I guess I don't have a choice'.

For fuck's sake, he presented three missions to us and told us we had to take at least ONE. We decided to take TWO. Yes, now that we've taken it we have an obligation to do what the job called for, but if it all turns out to be too much trouble that it is worth we can make the call to can it and go do something that won't result in a PR disaster.

Basically, I'm just trying to get a feel for how justified we are in trying to get the camera turned off. It's hard to figure out what "common sense" as it pertains to elements that simply don't exist in our world. A lot of people seem to have the impression that magical girls are in a Masquerade-like situation -- push comes to shove, there ARE mechanisms in place to cover your ass up, but the Powers That Be would really, REALLY prefer you not take it far enough to require any of that in the first place. Keep your head down and all the magical stuff strictly clandestine. But from what you're saying here, it sounds like basically anything we might do in the course of our bodyguard duties should be totally no big deal, even if millions of otaku see it broadcast live on the intertubes.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 06/30/13(Sun)08:26 No.25733104

It's something you've been trying out since the last time you woke up and forgot who you were.

It hasn't exactly been working out, but you're trying. You're trying your best. No one can begrudge you that, at least.

Now if only the idol you're working for would stop fucking around with you, maybe you can stop thinking about being unprofessional.

...Well. You're not going to really do that, as much as it's tempting. Kirishima Ruri is proving to be a somewhat decent perrson, despite the fact that she'd done pretty much everything she could to piss you off. From what she's told you - and you're trying your best to give her the benefit of the doubt, here - she was only testing you, or something along those lines. The stuff Iori told you about her? Simply her looking out for a fellow idol, because apparently she knows first-hand just how bad of an idea it is to have a Magical Girl for a partner.

Of course, it does have to be said...why'd she pick this suite, when she knows fully well that Iori was almost raped here?

"Hmm?" Ruri blinks up at you as she opens yet another hulking piece of luggage. You glance at its contents, expecting more hardware, like the rifle she'd just unpacked and assembled - but it's only clothes. Idol stuff. "Oh, that! Well, I wanted Iori-chan to get over that incident, too. One time we passed by here, she very nearly threw up because of the trauma. I thought...well, I should show her how it's not the same room anymore. I heard the hotel management pretty much had everything stripped and burned and replaced, even the flooring." She taps a heeled foot on the floor.

"I wanted to show her that she shouldn't dwell on it anymore, and whoever did it...well, they're not going to do it anymore, thanks to Chiaki-chan." It's here that she whistles slightly. "I watched that video as soon as it went online, you know. So brutal. So chilling." The idol shakes her head, shivering slightly as she hugs herself. "Still...it must be pretty nice to be protected by someone as dependable as you, Chiaki-chan."

Dependable? You audibly snort at this. You fell asleep on the job. You very nearly slept through the entire thing, if it weren't for--

>>25733112

You barely manage to stop yourself here. ...No. No one outside the industry needs to know about Pinky, or about what happened in that hotel suite.

Wait. WAIT. What video?!

"You didn't know?" Ruri blinks as she steps away from her luggage, walking towards you with her smartphone out. "Apparently those guys who tried to do the job on Iori was using a webcast camera. Only they set it so that once it detected that nothing was happening that it'd stop recording and upload the entire thing." She taps at her screen with a perfectly-manicured finger, before flipping the screen towards you. What you see is a high-definition recording of you...well, shooting Iori's would-be rapists dead.

And you were laughing. You...yo're sure you weren't, at that time. But you were laughing, a rough cackling that reached its crescendo as something golden and shiny snapped into your hand, bucking as it spat fire and brimstone.

But...but if the video did go out, then...

"It got deleted as soon as it came up, but a few people saw it and saved it." Ruri says, stepping up beside you so you could both watch it, and you could feel the soft heat of her body as she presses against your side. Her lightly-perfumed scent - one of a sugary peppermint - filling your nostrils.

Another finger comes up as she fast-forwards the entire video. "Don't worry, the video doesn't show Iori=chan at all. I've made sure to buy the license to the video and have it blocked from everywhere, too, so that she doesn't see it again by accident."

That's...huh. Despite how disconcerting it is to watch you gleefully murder a bunch of people who really deserved it, you think that Ruri seems to be not all that bad. Sort of.

"Really?" She grins cheekily at this, pressing against you just a bit more. "Ah, but I'm the sneaky, scheming idol, right? You should be careful about me, you know, Chiaki-chan. I could turn on you right this instant, and you'd be helpless."

>>25733126

You narrow your eyes at her, before gently shrugging her off. Restoring the distance between you and your client.

She can fuck around with you like this, sure. You'll let it pass to an extent. But she shouldn't do any more of the stuff she did earlier.

"Hai, hai~" Ruri snaps a sharp, textbook salute, one that's spoiled somewhat by the fact that she's winking while doing so. "No more funny stuff, Chiaki-chan! You can count on me!"

Well. So long as that's straightened out.

You idly rub at your arm - the arm that'd Ruri had, either by accident or design - had pressed herself against. It was...warm and nice, sure. But nothing you shouldn't care about.

You should start giving the room a once-over, then. For security purposes.

Where should you start?

Wait, so there are a select few otaku who got to see our snuff film. This is the kind of thing that when you try to cover it up it only comes out even more. Just like with the shit we do on 4chan, someone on their forums has already posted a pic showing the similarity's between us then and us now.

We are going to end up getting stalked for this.

Someone is going to find where we live, where we work, and post pictures of us coming and going on some forum.

You decide to check the bedroom first. It's the main area of the suite, anyway, and you're already here. But...you should probably check to see if you're not currently snoring in some Callidus' barrier before that. Not that you're paranoid or anything. It's just you being careful. Cautious. Professional.

Midori taught you this trick, during your final days in Sibaria. Apparently, Callidus are also trained to detect illusionary barriers, just in case a double agent or whatever is trying to get the jump on them. All they had to do was to get their Soul Gem back in its jewel form, and think very hard about finding a Witch in the vicinity. Apparently, the Barrier of a Witch and a Callidus were quite similar, and anyone's Soul Gem would react distinctly to either once they were close enough.

She did warn you, however, that it's not exactly a one-hundred percent thing. Some Callidus are known to be very good with their illusions, and it takes more than that to root them out. But in that case, Midori would sense it - and immediately contact you through your attunement with her. The both of you tried it out, during one evening - and you discovered that you could talk to each other with short sentences just fine, only that it was completely exhausting to keep up for a while. You agreed on only doing it during emergencies.

You tell Ruri to go back to whatever she was doing - the idol giggling here, before doing exactly that - and it's with your back turned to her that you manifest your Soul Gem back into the form that reminds you of an overly-elaborate Christmas tree bauble. You tap at the golden gilding gently, peering at the darkened purple gemstone - before taking a deep breath, closing your eyes, and concentrating. If there was a Witch or Callidus Barrier nearby, then it'd grow warm, almost hot in your hand, and glow in urgent pulses.

Only takes one magical hacker to shut down everything. Though it's probably more efficient to just have a bunch of people laughing at the "obviously doctored videos".

Whatever the case, it's really a minor thing, no? Murderface is already a legend so there's probably dozen of such "sighting videos" and things floating around.

One more won't change a thing.

You open your eyes after a moment, and see that the Soul Gem is inert. Nothing. Witch Barrier OR Callidus Barrier.

And Midori hasn't contacted you yet.

...Well, that's good enough. For now.

You turn slightly to glance at Ruri. She's humming as she holds up what seems like a very frilly and very...scant nightgown, holding it against her and looking at the mirror. Normal stuff.

You shake your head as your soul gem sparks into existence on the back of your right hand.

Idols.

You give the bedroom - and the living room, as well - the once-over you also gave it a few lifetimes ago, back when all you were guarding was a brown-haired idol getting on your case for not taking personal hygiene all that seriously. Nothing seems to be untoward, here - no hidden cameras, no weak locks or anything that could give easily with a shove. Nobody hiding underneath the bed or in the closets, either. The ceiling, which once had a skylight, was now firmly boarded up and skylight-less, so you won't have to worry about operapists rappeling down from it ever again.

"Chiaki-chan, can I ask you a question?" Ruri suddenly asks you, as you go down on your knees to look for anything under the furniture. Bugs and whatnot. "That Magical Girl whose knees you shot off in the video. What happened to her?"

...Well. She didn't even wait for you to say if she could ask you, but...

How do you respond?

[]None of your business.
[]Tell her about Midori.

You give the underside of the sofa another thorough look, before finally getting back up, patting your knees clean as you do so. Everything seems clean, from what your initial sweep tells you. That leaves the bathroom, which you make a beeline for. It's also here that you decide to indulge Kirishima Ruri on her curiosity.

The Magical Girl whose knees you shot off in the video? Well, if Ruri was at all familiar with standard operating procedure as far as captured Magical Girls are concerned, they're usually taken to a cold and dark room where they can't do any harm. They're kept there for a while until they're ready to be interrogated, the methods of which an idol like her doesn't really need to know. After that, depending on how the captured Magical Girl behaves - and the general temperament of those who captured her - then she's either set free and left to return to her Officio in shame, or killed and then disposed of.

"Has anyone ever told you that it's scary, the way you talk about stuff like that and sound like you don't care at all?" Ruri says this just as you check the bathroom's expansive clothes closet for anything amiss. Her voice trembling just so very slightly. "But hee, it's a bit exciting. Oh, please continue, sorry to interrupt."

Has anyone ever told her she was strange as fuck? Of course, you don't say this, merely grunting in annoyance before continuing.

You followed standard operating procedure on the Magical Girl, to the letter - except for the last bit. That was taken conveniently out of your hands by your boss. The last thing you know is that she's somewhere else, alive and well and most likely going to think twice before she takes another job like that.

"Hoh~ I see, I see. That's just a bit too convenient, though, but I'll take it, I suppose. I wanted to hear a sad ending, but a happy ending's not all that bad." Ruri's voice seems to grow wistful at this, before turning cheeky yet again. "Although...it'd be weird, wouldn't it, if you somehow fell in love with that Magical Girl instead of killing her like you were supposed to? Right, Chiaki-chan?"

How do you respond?

Falling in love? Heh. That'd be something. Unfortunately, that's optimistic - and you don't do optimistic. You tell the idol this as you step out of the freshly-inspected bathroom, holding out the pair of underwear you found, pinched between thumb and fingertip. You see Ruri grinning at you as she looks up from her luggage - before blinking somewhat as she sees what you're currently holding.

"I...um...I could explain that, I was--" The idol stutters, suddenly off-balance for the first time since you met, before you shake your head and toss the scrap of cotton and silk at her direction. Whatever her explanation is, you don't want to hear it - only that she should probably learn that there's a thriving market for an idol's used panties, and she should pack a bit more neatly. And used clothes go IN the hamper, not all over the place.

"Aheh. I'll...I'll remember that. Sorry..." Ruri knuckles her forehead, sheepishly sticking a tongue out in yet another cute, endearing idol-gesture. Making you quickly avert your eyes AND dampen what little satisfaction you earned from being able to lecture someone who earns millions just by prancing around on a stage while singing badly.

...Man. It's only been the first day, and you're already sick of this mission. It can't end soon enough, can it?

"I don't know how I left it there, though..." The idol tilts her head this way and that as she examines the pair of frilly underwear. "I'm positive I had Noriko-chan take care of my laundry before you got here, and--" It's then that her expression twists into a rather miffed one. "Oooh, that Noriko! That does it, she's definitely staying in the box for an entire night!"

You blink at this, before narrowing your eyes at her. What's this about a box you keep hearing about? She should really take it easy on Deepthroat--er, Noriko. The poor girl tries her best, even you could see that.

>>25735420

Instead of rebuking you, the idol seems to take your suggestion seriously, a grunt of frustration issuing from her. "Nnn, I know...and really, I do treat her as nice as I could, even when it looks like I don't! But sometimes, you can't help but try and tease her, you know?" Ruri looks at you with an expression of mingled despair, like someone desperate to get her point across. "It's...it's like she's this perfect M, and you just want to bully her and make her cry whenever you see her--"

No. No you don't know anything about that. And what the hell is the damn box about?

"Oh, it's nothing bad. It's just whatever huge box I can find, and she has to stay inside it for a while with the lights out. When she falls asleep inside of it, I sneak up and shake it while making ghost noises."

...Yeah, that thing about her changing your opinion about idols? She had an awful start, then began to do well until she's back into horrible again.

Although...well, that does sound hilarious. Awful, but hilarious.

Anyway. It looks like her suite's clean, for now. You don't need to start getting paranoid at the moment. You let out a sigh, before turning to Ruri and opening your mouth to ask about her twenty-four hour webcast - before someone suddenly entering the suite cuts you off.

It's...well. You've seen a lot of Yakuza, and they're Yakuza, alright. No matter how well they dress or how much they'd like to pass off the bulges inside their suits as nothing particularly illegal or high-caliber, you could spot one from a mile away.

But this one - at least, the one with the more expensive suit and the one to first step into the room looks...sharper. Young for a yakuza, too, probably in his mid-thirties or something. No disfiguring scars like his goons, but he does have quite the shit-eating sneer that, combined with his perenially-narrowed makes you want to grind clean off his face with the pavement.

We appreciate you choosing our city as the final venue for your world tour - no doubt we'll be feeling the boost in our economy and popularity for years to come."

He seems civil enough. You turn to Ruri, and--

...Well. She doesn't look like she was expecting him. In fact, she looks positively livid.

"What are you doing here?!" Ruri's shout is a whip-crack in the relative silence of the hotel room. "You're not supposed to even be in the same building as I am! What...how did you get past security? They weren't supposed to let you in--"

"They weren't, I'll agree," The yak says silkily, not missing a beat despite the obvious discomfiture of the super idol. "But we reassured them that we were only here for a very brief meeting with you. Business matters." It's here that he snaps his fingers, and one of his goons gives him a manila folder. "Now, I'm sure you've read my emails, Miss Kirishima, so you must know why I'm here. It's the matter of--"

"I'm not signing your damn contract," Ruri snarls. "I've got my own production company, and no matter how many zeroes are there on your check I'm not leaving! I know what happens to Tojo Production idols after they sign!"

"All rumor and baseless conjecture, I assure you--"

"GET OUT! JUST GET OUT!"

How do you react? From your count, it seems like there's the lead yak and four, maybe five goons with him. All of them probably armed.

I think that regardless of how this goes down, we should question QB about QB Heavy Industry's relationship with the Tojo Group.
Are they a frequent client, or a competitor? And if the latter, how much of a thorn in our side is their competition, and how much is it costing our bottom line.
A little competition is good, but if it starts cutting into our profits too much, we should take measures to prune the opposition.

Good thing they're in the way of our work and probably won't go quietly. Gonna need several bodybags for this. If we see anyone else from the organization after this, might have to think about purging them for causing trouble to our client.

The lead yak sighs the sigh of the massively-bereaved, his rather bulky shoulders going up and down in a theatrical shrug. "Please, just hear us out, Miss Kirishima. I'm prepared to offer you twice what I did the last time, along with all the benefits of being a member of Tojo productions. Why, we'll even make you our flagship idol, if you're worried about starting from scratch. Please reconsider--"

"No! I don't care about your damn offer, I told you to GET OUT!" Ruri takes what appears to be a walkie-talkie from her bedside drawer. "Hello? Hello, security! Get up here right this minute!"

It's here that you finally insinuate yourself into this little scene, placing yourself in between your client and the yakuza. For some reason, they didn't seem to have noticed you, all their eyes riveted to the idol. Suits you just fine, really - and you'd have taken the opportunity with a machinegun if you could. But not right now, not when a pile of bullet-riddled bodies would prove inconvenient to your client.

"Excuse me?" The yak stops in his approach, his piercing eyes narrowing at you. "Stand aside, girl. I've business with Kirishima, not you. Don't get involved."

Cute. You shake your head at this. "Miss Kirishima is asking you businessmen to leave. This meeting has ended." You say this as quietly and as politely as you can, and it's with nonchalant slowness that you place a hand on the rim of your Shield. Ready to slam it into Time Stop the very first moment you're given a reason to.

The lead yak opens his mouth to protest, before realization visibly dawns upon him - his eyes straying to your costume, then at the Shield on your arm. It's then that he steps back and smiles, like that of a shark just sighting its next meal.

Surely Miss Kirishima doesn't think she's in any sort of danger that requires the protection of one of...them?" He cocks his head towards you, the gesture making his slicked-back hair gleam in the overhead lighting.

"I do, if scum like you are getting up here like you own the place," Ruri spits, clearly frazzled by this encounter. "Chiaki-chan? If one of them makes a sudden move, you've my permission to shoot their kneecaps out."

She doesn't even need to say it.

"Oh, don't blame them, please. They're just hardworking men who wish to go back to their wives and families after a hard day's work, of guarding one of Japan's most precious jewels." The yak smiles again, before looking down at you. "Young lady, I do apologize that we had to meet like this. May I ask your name, and from which Officio do you hail from?"

Well, this is new. Normally, yakuza don't last long enough to ask you your name. Normally all they do is screaming.

The Magical Girl Ruri was in love with was actually the original Ruri. When she broke their relationship apart, current!Ruri murdered her, then in a fit of grief and self-loathing contracted with a wish to take the original Ruri's place and live out her dead lover's dream of being a world famous idol. This accounts for the dead body double; that was original!Ruri, murdered by her former lover, current!Ruri.

Ruri is Ruri, her meguca waifu was originally a girl who looked up to Ruri and fell in love with her, whose wish was to be more like her love? So she slowly started changing physical appearance until she was almost Ruri's body double. That explains why there was a family who identified the body as their daughter - it was their daughter, who'd slowly taken on Ruri's appearance as part of her (Callidus?) powers.

You shake your head at this. "I'm sorry, I thought your business was with Miss Kirishima. Not me. And I just informed you, that business was concluded." You step forward, suddenly, causing the six-foot slab of italian suit-wrapped muscle and oily pompadour to step back again. "Don't. Let me. Detain you."

This is diplomacy, right? Mami told you you'd need to be diplomatic sometimes, as Warmaster. It isn't so bad, after all - it's actually pretty fun. The only hard part is stopping yourself from shooting someone.

"Yes, well. I see Miss Kirishima has chosen her escort well." The yakuza seems to compose himself after a moment, before suddenly bowing to you. Holding out with both hands what looks to be a calling card. "We of the Tojo Group respect the hard work you and your fellow Magical Girls do for our business. It's not much, but please accept this."

You blink at this sudden show of...reverence, before taking the card. You don't have one of your own, and despite yourself, you find yourself apologizing for this.

"Perfectly all right." It's then that he straightens up, and looks back at Ruri. "I'll take my leave today, Miss Kirishima, but if you change your mind--"

"I WON'T!"

"...If you do, please don't hesitate to call me no matter the hour. I will be happy to accomodate and welcome you to the Group personally." He turns to you and nods, the smile on his face almost servile, craven, except for the fact that they never seemed to reach his eyes. "Good day to you both." It's then that he turns around, and ushers his goon out of the room - but not before nearly bumping into Sayaka and Deepthroat, with the latter holding up the camera.

"Huh? Who're you guys?" Sayaka asks, confused and angry about being confused. "Hey! Watch where you're going, you fu--nny-smelling idiot!" The Eversor deftly censors herself as she gets pushed aside by a rather beefy goon shoving past her. Deepthroat doesn't fare any better, being buffetted here and there, but she makes a valiant show of keeping the camera trained at the yaks - which probably helped in getting them to leave all the more quickly.

"Fucking yaks," Blueberry snarls as the last of them finally leaves, the door closing behind them. "Heard you from next door, Murderface. They give you any trouble?"

No, they didn't. Nearly did. ...If she heard everything, why didn't she burst in, too? You'd have appreciated the help, at least. ...And where's Iori?

"Nah, you sounded like you got everything under control. I was actually waiting for the gunshots to start. Color me surprised when you didn't even pistol-whip one in the face just to make a point." It's here that she grins, before noticing that Deepthroat's still going on with the camera, her knees knocking together.

"Er...you don't hafta pretend anymore, they're gone. Oh, and Iori had to go, earlier. Told us she'll be back, she needs to get to the dance routine practice early, something like that." She catches the look you're giving her. "Jeez, I made sure she got to her car fine, okay? Yaks weren't here yet when she did. Told me to tell you to be careful, too, and she'll talk to you later.

"N-no, that's not until later," Deepthroat replies shakily. "It was...it was Miss Sayaka's idea, to make them think they were gonna end up on the webcast..."

Huh. There's a thing. You thought Sayaka was all about the choppy, not the cunning.

"Hey! I can be cunning too!".

Well. Who'd have thought. Super idol gets nervy because some yaks came to visit.

You glance at the card you're given.

>Mine Yoshitaka
>Hakuho-kai President
>Tojo Group

Mine Yoshitaka, huh? You put the calling card in your inventory. May come in handy. You should probably ask Kyuubey about this group later, too.

"We think that someone in my own production firm's in cahoots with them," Ruri finishes Deepthroat's hanging sentence for her, gasping all the while. "And because of that, my...my security's compromised. That's the other reason why I hired you, Chiaki-chan. I want you to help me root out whoever's behind it, and get them to the proper authorities to be dealt with."

...To the proper authorities? No, she can just give you five minutes alone in a room with all of her staff, and you'll find who it is. They'll be leaving the place in a bodybag.

Ruri blinks at this, before shaking her head. Managing a smile and a wink despite her obviously frazzled state. "That's...that's not how Justice works, Chiaki-chan."

"Yeah, that's not how Justice works at all." Sayaka says, suddenly smug as she crosses her arms under her chest."Besides, I can do it in three."

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 07/01/13(Mon)08:01 No.25754449

You are a Magical Girl, and...you've had quite the day, so far.

From finding out that your client's kind of a scheming superbitch but is actually also kind of nice, to finding out that she's also hired you to protect her from a bunch of yaks seeking to sign her on - it's definitely been quite a busy first day for this mission. You doubt that you could take three more days of this, to be honest.

But with that said, you can't help but be...satisfied with yourself. Happy would be pushing it. Satisfied, yes.

Satisfied that you were able to be diplomatic for the first time. Without shooting someone in the kneecaps. Or in their stupid fat faces.

It's kind of strange to be pleased with something like that, but it's enough for you. You'll take your victories where you can get them.

...Mami would be proud of you.

Heh. There's always a first time for everything.

Seems that things are winding down a bit, though. It's still morning, and from what you've heard from Ruri, she's got quite the itinerary to attend to today. But right now seems to be a good time to step back and check things out a bit, as well as get Sayaka updated about what you've learned. The super idol you're supposed to guard seems to be trying to calm down a panic attack, most probably from the unexpected visit from the yaks, earlier.

Speaking of that unexpected visit, you've sent Deepthroat down to fetch the leader of the security detail downstairs. Ruri had tried to make you step down from that, but since you're in charge of her security now, you'd at least want to try and get things handled properly, your own way.

In any case, you're doing some winding down of your own. Sayaka is sitting beside you, finishing off the remainder of her breakfast earlier - while you tried to give the pancakes a chance. Yes, they're not piping hot or fluffy anymore, but they're not all that bad. Certainly not anything approaching what Mami could make, but edible. And you hate wasting food.

"You going to finish that, Murderface?" Sayaka says through a mouthful of food, having already cleared her own plate and is only just starting on Ruri's own leftovers. You narrow your eyes at her - just how hungry is she? You'd have expected this kind of appetite from Kyoko, but not her.

"Eversor physiology," The Blueberry replies, turning from you to briefly chug down a glassful of orange juice, before burping rather cutely. "Big breakfasts, then just snacks all throughout the day. We need the calories, since we're not sedentary wastes of space like Vindicares are."

Oh. Well, that explains how every Eversor you know almost always acts like a spoiled kid high on sugar, then.

"Fuck you, Murderface. Are you gonna finish those or not?"

What do you do first?

[]Call Kyuubey, inform him about the Tojo Group.
[]Call Kyoko, ask her to give a report and how Midori's doing.
[]Ask Sayaka about her disillusionment about Kirishima Ruri.
[]Other.

You decide to give Kyuubey a call while Sayaka continues to devour Ruri's leftovers. The phone at the other end rings exactly three times before he picks up. When he does, though, you are hit by the background noise of what sounds like a lot of voices chattering in the background. Female, from what you can tell by the squealing.

"Ah, thank you. Yes, please hold it up to my ear--that's better." It's here he clears his throat. "Alright. Yes, Matsuda? I trust the mission is going well?"

You blink at this, silent for a few moments before replying. Yes, things are...for lack of a better word, going well. Just a few snags, but nothing too major except for the reason you called.

"Good to hear it, Matsuda. As I've made clear before, I was rather concerned about how you'd perform in a mission of high importance such as this. I am relieved to hear that my fears are allayed, at least." Another clearing of his throat. "I was surprised to find out about your cosplaying hobby, to be honest. Not that I have anything against it, of course - I've always supported my agents to have hobbies of their own, barring that of regularly trying to find out just how much alcohol they can imbibe and still be able to wield firearms reliably."

You thank him for the vote of confidence, before the other things that he said manage to sink in.

...Wait, what cosplaying hobby? You haven't told him about your cover yet. And...what's that racket in the background, anyway? Where is he?

"At the general meeting room, Matsuda. Since quite a few of the Officio are also fans of your client, I've decided to allow them to use it and its widescreen to watch the webcast. They're quite impressed with how you're sticking to your role, although a few are also incensed about how you're communicating with your client. I'll not name names, of course."

...So. The entire Officio - at least the girls currently on active duty - are going to be watching you screw this whole thing up?

"Well, now. That's a bit pessimistic, isn't it? You're well within the bounds of adequate performance from what I'm seeing. The fact that you haven't shot your client yet is proof enough."

...Right. Fine. You try to ignore that little revelation and give it to him straight - that the Tojo Group seems to have their sights on your client. Personal visit from them has Ruri sucking air from a paper bag, and a security guard potentially getting his kneecaps shot off.

"I see. Quite serious. Do you have the name of their representative? I'm sure one of them did most of the talking."

You fish out the card from your inventory and read off it. Some guy named Yoshitaka Mine. Looked pretty serious. President of the Hakuho-kai, or something like that.

"...Well. I see they've promoted him." Kyuubey sounds mildly impressed. "I know of him, Matsuda. A prior client - he's the one who took out a contract for the Inagawa-kai Yakuza overboss. I sent Sakura Kyoko to take care of it, seeing as you chose to retire Kirika Kure instead." It's then that he makes a slight grunting sound. "He was just a middle manager of sorts, then. It's reasonable to assume that he was promoted due to Sakura Kyoko's success with that particular operation."

If that's the case, why does Kyuubey sound like he's just had his jimmies rustled?

"Because he's never taken up another assignment from us, despite a cordial, verbal agreement. But perhaps the fact is that he's found a more competitive Officio to outsource such duties to, and a few of my sources say that it may be the Tenth."

"I wouldn't take this personally. He hasn't done anything I would've done." A pause. "Well, besides what happened in Siberia, of course. We will seek retaliation for that in due time, in due process."

Damn right you are. And you'll be leading that op, no questions asked.

"...Yes. Very well. But focus on your mission for now, Matsuda. I will see what can be done with the Tojo Group. In the meantime, is there anything else you'd like to mention? Do you require additional resources, or anything of the like?"

How do you respond?

You do have a couple of things you'd like to request, if he's asking.

"Very well. Tell me and I'll do my best to accommodate."

Right. Yes. Well. First off, you'd like to ask Kyuubey to try and scour for as much information about your client as he can. She seems to know quite a lot about you and the industry, and she's even admitted to having a relationship with one. There's also the incident two years past, when a dead body that was a dead ringer for Ruri was found in Santa Destroy, during one of her concerts. Everything he can find about the idol, basically.

"...Well, I suppose I can have the Vanus check again. Perhaps they'll find something about that incident. As for her prior history to any agents...well, Matsuda, we do try to respect the privacy of our clients. Blackmail has stopped being one of our main revenue streams." A pregnant silence, here. "...But I'm sure we'll be able to find something. I will see to it personally."

Right. Fine. You'd like that delivered to you via your phone as soon as possible.

"Right. Anything else?"

Yes. A Callidus support specialist. Someone reliable and professional, who doesn't get starstruck easily. If the Tenth is involved with the Tojo Group, then there's the possibility that a few Magical Girls will be sent your way, to mess things up and do some damage. Any other threat can easily be taken care of between you and Sayaka, but if a Callidus gets sent, then at least you'll have someone to counter it.

"I see. Very well. I'll send the best I have on active duty. Expect to receive her tonight. She'll be accompanying the vindicares you requested as overwatch."

...Sure. You can wait.

For a mutant cat, your boss is being strangely reasonable, nowadays.

"What do you mean, Matsuda? This has always been how I've handled things with you and the other girls."

Really?...Well, maybe you've been a bit uncharitable to him in the past.

"Nothing I'm not used to, Matsuda. In any case, put it out of your mind, and focus on your mission. I will update you as soon as I can. ...Oh, and if possible, try to project a better image when you're on camera. The girls here are very proud to have their Warmaster being seen all over the world, and Mami herself is sending her regards."

R-right. Fine. You thank him, and end the connection right there before things get too weird.

"So what'd the mutant cat say?" Sayaka asks, and you relay the conversation as best as you can, without giving too many details that Ruri might overhear - the idol's locked herself in the suite bathroom, probably throwing up or something. She blinks at this, before shaking her head. "...Huh. Kyuubey actually granted a personnel request? That's...new. He's not really up for that kinda thing." It's then that her expression turns sly. "What're you doing, huh? Are you buttering up to the boss to get these kinda favors?"

You snort at this, and continue taking your pancake pile to pieces, albeit at a slower pace than Sayaka. The only thing you know how to butter up are pancakes, and you've shot your boss to pieces for just looking at you funny.

"But that's always how he looks at everyone," Sayaka points out.

Exactly. Why.

It's then that someone knocks on the suite door, and it's opened with a careful, almost painfully-slow deliberation. As it swings open, you see Deepthroat looking like she's just about to shake herself to pieces, with one of the suited gorillas that had stopped you from entering the hotel earlier. He's just as sweaty and nervous as Deepthroat is, and that's saying something.

"H-here he is, Miss M-Matsuda," Deepthroat quakes. "U-um, can I be excused, here? I...I don't want to be here when you shoot his kneecaps out..."

The security guard visibly pales at this, but he's standing straighter at least.

You nod after a moment, and Deepthroat all but runs out of the suite, slamming the door behind her. The sound of it loud enough to startle the already-frightened guard, although he's making a show of not being afraid.

"This is the guy who let the yaks in?" Sayaka mutters as she loudly crunches on some bacon strips. "Well, I'll leave you to it, Murderface. Try not to get any blood on curtains, huh? Those are a bitch to get out."

...Why is everyone assuming that? You're not some sort of kneecap-shooting-out maniac, here.

"Hey, I'm just going along with the flow." Blueberry chugs down another glass of orange juice. "I'd do it myself, but this isn't my op."

You can tell her to do it for you, though. You outrank her, right?

"Yeah. But you wouldn't, because you're not an asshole in that kinda way." Sayaka grins, before turning to glare at the guard. "HEY! Who the fuck told you to eyeball us, huh?"

The guard swallows audibly at this, and you can see him fighting back the instinct to backpedal. "N-not eyeballing you, ma'am. Sorry, ma'am."

Common bit of fun over in moonland. Take Flandre Scarlet's stage theme from Touhou ie this:
https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=8jJZA-O_B78

Another thing they do is take this clip:
https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=wieStI7kN-I
from Macross Frontier, and make it into full length music.

Combine the two and you get [x] THE FLESH OF FALLEN ANGELS.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You let out a sigh, before pushing your plate towards Sayaka, letting her have what's left of your pancakes. She blinks at you, here, before murmuring something that sounds suspiciously like a 'thank you' without sounding like she's been asked to gargle plutonium.

You allow the guard to stew in his own soup, first. You give him a once over, leaning your elbows on the table, resting your chin on your interlaced fingers. Glaring at him from over the rim of your glasses.

Sayaka's right, he does look like someone just picked up off the street just because he's got enough muscles to look intimidating, and then given a gun and a poorly-tailored suit. He also looks young for someone in this line of work - not like the grizzled, scarred lot you've always associated with the job.

It's only after what seems like an eternity - you waiting for him to start wondering when the other boot would drop - that you ask him. Short, direct, and to the point, an unexpected verbal punch that makes him flinch.

"Why did you let the Yakuza in?"

>>25771391

You pause here. Just as he opens his mouth to reply, you cut him off by drawing your Golden Desert Eagle from inside your jacket and placing it carefully on the table. The cold, lustrous metal warming immediately at your touch.

"Don't you like your kneecaps?" You ask this, still in deadpan tones. "Have they wronged you in some way?"

You ignore Sayaka sputtering and snorting orange juice out of her nose, the stricken Eversor cramming a linen napkin into her face while groaning about how much it stings.

"...I...I like my kneecaps where they are, please, Ma'am. But...really, we stopped them, we didn't want them to get in, but their boss just smiled and took something out of his wallet, and--"

"Money?" Sayaka recovers just enough to sound snide. "What, you guys got bought off? Fuck, Murderface, I'll do it." She looks around, before staring at the pancakes you've given her. "Pancakes are technically cakes, right? I can probably pull one out of there if I--"

"N-no! No, ma'am, we don't work that way!" The guard shakes his head furiously, positively sweating bullets now. "It was some sorta card, like a business card - but it was glowing and stuff! A-and when we saw it, the next moment we realized they were already on their way out! It...it was like some sorta dream, or we blacked out and just woke up, or something!"

Hnh. That's...well. That's certainly curious. It doesn't seem like he's lying, though.

How do you react?

Depends on what the footage shows.

If there moved like as if under instruction, we burn the card. If it was more dazed and on the floor, we send the card back to QB for analysis.

Either way we remove it from our inventory, asap.

The guard couldn't have nodded quickly enough. "Y-yes, ma'am. The card...the card looked like, uh, begging your pardon here, but it looked like from one of those card games that're really popular with the kids, you know? The ones that they make anime out for to sell? With...with the monsters, and spells, that kind of thing? And it was glowing with a kinda...green light, ma'am. Like it was burning in his hand, but not really." He looks at you, then back at Sayaka, wringing his hands. "I-I know it sounds crazy, ma'am, but that's what I saw. That's what we saw."

"Hoh. Well. First time I've heard of something like that." Sayaka growls from around a mouthful of pancake. You tut at the useless interruption from the Eversor, before gesturing for the guard to continue.

"A-and we didn't see any girl out there, ma'am. Just him and his group." The guard shakes his head. "Although...they did come in from a limousine, ma'am, they parked directly in front of the Hotel. The windows were tinted, so we didn't get a good look at who was inside."

Hm. Curiouser and curiouser.

You'd like the video footage of this, if it exists. ...There should be footage of it, right? This kind of Hotel, there should be some sort of CCTV at the front...

"T-that's..." The guard lowers his gaze down on the floor. "That's what took us so long to get here, ma'am. I wanted to get it up here personally, so...so you don't shoot off our kneecaps, ma'am. But..." He looks up again, helplessly. "Somehow the cameras covering the entrance shut down as soon as their limo came into, ma'am. We only just got them started up again, earlier. Tried scouring it for any clues, but all that's shown there is the limo. It doesn't even show the guy getting out of the car."

If...if you really need to shoot somebody's knees out, ma'am, I'll volunteer for it. Not the other guys, they got family to take care of. I...I don't even got a girlfriend." He laughs feebly.

If we confirm this then you get to keep your kneecaps, new rule if someone refuses to leave after the second time they are to be brought down and removed from the premises, if they reach for anything take them down, permanently if necessary

Who else was there? Did the Yaks have someone who seemed out of place, either a girl around my age or someone who just didn't seem right in their crew

Finally report all suspicious activity to me or her (pointing to Sayaka) if I am not reachable for the duration of this concert and we will deal with it if anything weird like this card happens again

In any case, we'll take precautions. We have a specialist arranged for this sort of thing. Any and all potential problems get reported to me directly and immediately, no matter how trivial they might seem.

For now, I need you to do a variety of things that require you to use your legs. Reorganise the patrols, set everyone on higher alert status, and set up some extra standalone cameras. In fact, keep one guy near a window with a film camera to snap any unauthorised or suspicious persons. If it's digital jamming, then film might still work. Get a disposable from the convenience store if no-one in the press gallery has one to spare.

Handle that to my satisfaction and i'll continue giving you tasks that require you to have working legs. Dismissed."

You drum your fingers on the table. This shouldn't have been surprising, really, not after Kyuubey telling you that the Tojo Group's involved with the Tenth. You're also impressed with how they did it - if you were a scumsucking piece of shit yakuza with Magical Girl resources, you'd also find a way for them to provide support without being overt about it - seeing as any other Yakuza organization worth their back tattoos would also have access to the same resources. Subtle.

You tell the guard, then, that you'll take his word for now, and you'll let him keep his kneecaps. The card he saw was no doubt Magical in property - and it's unreasonable for you to expect him and his group to be able to defend against it. This is what you're here for, anyway, and you'll handle it yourself. But they'll have to help.

"R-right, ma'am. Whatever you want us to do, ma'am, we'll do it." He rips off a snappy salute, here, making you wince as he very nearly judo-chops himself in the forehead.

Right. Well. First, you want him to spread his men out. Don't just cluster up on the entrance. Divide them into squads, regular rotating patrols, constant radio contact at all times. Get the CCTV going back online, and have the hotel staff set up other cameras but don't connect them to the main network - just on their own, and hidden as much as possible. You'll want a headset set to their frequency, too, so you can keep track of whatever's happening. Finally, any and all potential problems - including people trying to get into the hotel - has to be cleared by you first. You or the bad-tempered Blueberry beside you.

"R-right. Gotcha, ma'am. I'll relay all of that, and get that headset to you pronto." The guard nods, looking at Sayaka - and the Eversor returns the stare with a glare that could have melted someone from their carbonite prison. He gulps and looks back down on his feet.

Well. At least he's taking it seriously.

You ask him, then, what his name is. You'd like to know the name of the guard who just narrowly avoided having his kneecaps shot off.

"K-Kamijou Kyosuke, ma'am," The guard says, snapping a salute yet again - and making Sayaka choke on her orange juice once more. "At your service, of course."

Kyosuke? Huh. Well. That's fine. He's dismissed.

"Thank you, ma'am." The guard bows, before turning smartly and leaving, pulling on the door and closing it gently and carefully behind him. You then hear, from the corridor, the sound of Deepthroat whimpering as she bumps into what sounds like a solid wall, and Kyosuke furiously apologizing, before running away.

Cards. That's new. You try taking a sip of the orange juice yourself, wincing at the horrible, acidic taste. What kind of person actually likes drinking this stuff for breakfast? At least water's more gentle, yet more bracing and refreshing.

You should probably tell Ruri about this, anyway. Once she gets out of the bathroom.

You make to pick up the Desert Eagle from the table - to put it back in its holster - when you notice that Sayaka's gone quiet beside you, her hands curled into fists on her lap.

Now what's wrong?

"...Nothing, Murderface. Just...just leave me alone. And for fuck's sake, put that away."

How do you react?

Basically, in Ye Olde Times, the Equerry took care of the King's horses. This has hilarious implications in the world of hentai doujins.
Here, she is basically the person we tell to hit people with a stick if we don't want to do the hitting ourselves.

You glance at your gun, then shake your head and slip it back into its holster - zipping up your jacket once more, completely concealing the Golden Weapon from view. Fine, you tell Sayaka. You're not going to pry, even though she's acting strange as fuck again. You just want to know if this is going to have an impact on the current op.

"...No. No it's not going to. Now leave me alone, alright, Murderface?" Sayaka's voice is tight and controlled, yet there's the tiniest tremor in it. Whether it's from anger or something else, you don't know. "Shit. Here, of all fucking places. And I thought he was dead."

...Sayaka?

"I said--" Sayaka turns to snarl at you, eyes glinting - before blinking as she suddenly backs away, face draining of all color. Shaking her head, she gets up from her seat, wiping her mouth briefly with a napkin and making a beeline for the door. "...Forget it. I'll...go ahead and scout the the floors. Get some fresh air. You need me, call me on my phone." She glares at the door leading to the suite's bathroom. "You tell the idol what's up. I...I just gotta breathe, Murderface. This room's choking me."

...Well, you won't count this as dereliction of duty, now, seeing as she's obviously under a lot of stress. But this shit, right here? You'll have to talk about it with her, when she's not in super ultra bitch mode.

You get a chortle out of Sayaka with that. "Heh. Fuck you, Murderface." The Eversor manages to show you a faint smile, before walking out and slamming the door behind her.

You hear, yet again, the sound of Deepthroat being knocked into the ground, and Sayaka uttering an expletive and an apology at the same time. A moment more, and you hear her footsteps, rapid and quick, but at the opposite direction that Kyosuke went. Leaving you alone with the idol, again.

You let out a sigh, and walk over to the bathroom. You rap your knuckles against the heavy teak door, after brazenly jiggling the handle and finding it locked.

What's taking her so long? Is she having such a breakthrough that she needs to lock herself away, or is she just pooping a whole lot?

"N-no! I'll...I'll be out in a moment!" Comes Ruri's slightly panicked voice.

And so she was. The idol looking as fresh as she always did when you first met her.

Immediately, you tell her about what you found out about the Tojo Group. About who they've allied themselves to, and how they got up to the penthouse without a peep from security. She doesn't look that alarmed, although you do note that she's taking this seriously - unlike the other VIPs who simply waved it off.

"So a Magical Girl's helping those punks out, huh? Well, that's just great." She puffs her cheeks out in annoyance, before suddenly breaking out in a grin. "Well, that's fine. I've got the real Murder Mayumi as my security detail, right?"

...Yeah. She does.

In any case, you can ask her some questions, now.

What do you ask Kirishima Ruri?

"Why is the Tojo group so interested in you? When did they start? What happens to the idols they acquire? Do you have any recollection of them using Magical Girls in the past? Just tell me everything you know about them.

You do know that my singing voice sounds like a pile of broken glass, covered in gravel, doused in gasoline, and set on fire. It's not pretty. Adding onto that the only instrument I can play without sounding like I'm skinning a live cat is the triangle. Also, I can't dance or smile, why did you want me to perform in the concert?

Do you really need there to always be cameras? They get in the way and prevent me from moving freely or using magic, we're trying to avoid public notice that I'm actually magic.

Where'd you get the clout to ask for me specifically instead of being assigned someone else? Why me? I'm not really that special or likable. I'm a bitch, and more than a bit insane. Why are you obsessed with me? How much do you actually know about me?"

Also, ask about today's itinerary.

Instead of letting the Armoured-Homu be the tank as she was best suited for, they thought Midori going full Kharn was a good idea.

Telling Ribbonhomu to get fucked instead of using diplomacyskills and Midohugs which carried us pretty much through the entire barrier was batshit retarded though, and everyone who voted for "Get fucked" should feel bad for voting for that shit.

I thought it was good. Kharn went in expecting a fight to the death with a monstrous & barely-sane Murderface, and instead got confronted by the hard truth about how stupid she was acting and how out-of-date her "honorable death" mindset was.

Though to be honest, I'm unsure why people chose the "Get fucked" option when every success Midori had in the barrier was some variation of running away, hiding, or using diplomancy.

Kharn was literally making an in-universe HUEHUEHUE choice of her own, one which could very well prove fatal to the woman Midori loved and her wish to get everyone out alive. And Midori had dealt with enough BS in that barrier + Kharn not being a good idea to directly attack, that just getting fed up with her and furiously refuting her stupidity/appealing to whatever was left of her tiny heart and brain wasn't actually too horrible of an idea. We didn't have a whole lot to lose at that point since things were already spiraling into having to fight her.

"What is this, a bull rush?" Ruri blinks at you, before giggling awkwardly and walking towards the couch. "Kidding, kidding. Yes, I know why you're asking them. Just...just let me get all my thoughts in order, okay?"

Fine. You can wait. ...Why'd she take so long in the bathroom, anyway?

"Panic attack. I get them sometime when stuff like that springs up from out of nowhere." Ruri frowns, and sticks her tongue out at you. "What? It's common enough for idols. High-stress job like this, even anyone'd get high-strung. Even you, probably."

...Nah. You can't imagine that happening. The idol thing, anyway. But the panic attacks? Maybe. You'd be the first alcoholic idol in the world.

You don't say this, however.

In any case, you cross your arms and listen as the idol gives you the answers you need.

The Tojo Group, as it seems, is currently in the business of finding more...legitimate streams of revenue, or what Kyuubey would have called it, anyway. They've created their own production company, Tojo Productions, and they've been signing idols by attracting them with highly-lucrative contracts and highly-publicized negotiations.

The idols who would sign would become the popular thing for a while, before suddenly and suspiciously getting married off, and then simply fading into obscurity. ...A few have been found dead, either by drug overdose or by mysterious circumstances. Ruri did admit that not all of Tojo Production idols befall this fate, but it's too suspicious not to take note of.

The twenty-four hour webcast isn't really twenty-four hours, as exemplified by how you're currently not broadcasting at the moment. There are periodical commercial breaks, but the concert itself will be webcast in full.

As for the clout that she used to get you specifically? "I don't really know about clout, but since I did want to meet you, I tried it anyway. I did submit my request to Kyuubey-san's mail personally, but..." Ruri scratches her cheek with a perfectly-manicured index finger. "I do remember Producer-san getting Kyuubey-san on the phone and talking about a cut of the ticket sales? Something like that."

Well. There you have it. Fucking mutant cat. What about the performing thing? You're not a part of the all-dancing, all-singing crap of the world. Has she heard what your voice sounds like? You're not getting on that stage--

"Oh, you are! But you'll be performing as Murder Mayumi, it'll be perfect!" Ruri grins at this, her strangely-glowing eyes twinkling and sparkling. "Oh, and don't worry about your sucky voice, there's always lip-synching! I do that when I've got a sore throat!"

You'll let your ego soak that bruise. What about her itinerary for today? What's she got lined up?

"Well, um. Let's see..." The super idol takes out her phone, and begins to flip through it. "I've got a pool wear gravure photoshoot in thirty minutes or so, that's until after lunch, and then a live televised interview with a news show...three radio interviews after that, and then dress rehearsal at the stadium until six. After that, I'm yours!" She winks at you. "You can take me out on a date then, Chiaki-chan!"

"Wah, so cold! You cut to the quick, Chiaki-chan!"

It's then that Deepthroat sidles back into the room, camera held up. "U-um, Ruri-sama? We have to go back online in two minutes. You...you told me to tell you in advance, but you were busy talking to Miss Matsuda..."

A thread or two ago Ruri went on for like 3 Decu posts about how dating Magical Girls are bad and she said everything to Iori to protect her. She made it very clear that dating Magical Girls is the worst evil for an idol.
>"You can take me out on a date then, Chiaki-chan!"
Fuck Idols.
I, personally, hate this job, because I already didn't like Iori, and this idol is even worse.

Hearing Ruri explain what's been happening with Tojo Production idols...it sounds very much like what Kilgore's been doing. But unlike the musclebound goon that you and Tiny Pete obliterated, this was a much more...insiduous way of doing it. It's not as if they forced the idols, it sounds like - just tricked them into it with the promise of money and fame and a soft life. Not that it makes it any better, of course.

Fucking yaks. Yes, sure, they pay good money, and they often hire girls out for more exciting assignments - but even Kyuubey's told you that it won't be long until the Officio stop accepting their job requests. Something about it not paying off as well as it should, or it being too much bad PR than it's worth.

Anyway, everything that Ruri's told you more or less seems to make sense. You're still on your guard, of course, especially with the knowledge that enemy Magical Girls are going to be involved on this op - but at least you're not as on guard against your client, now. You can breathe a bit easier knowing that your client isn't about to go crazy and kill you in your sleep, or something.

As Ruri begins to touch up her makeup in front of a rather heavy-looking mirror Deepthroat is holding up with both hands - more idol-stuff, apparently - it's here that you take the opportunity to call Sayaka. The webcast's about to come on again, and it wouldn't look good without her.

"Yeah, yeah, I'm going. I went ahead and did a Callidus check, just in case." Her voice seems to sound strained and nasal, as if she's suddenly got a cold. "Nothing here, it's clean. On my way back as we speak."

Right. You thank her, and shove the phone back into your inventory. Your hand comes up with...well, the hat. As if begging to be worn while you pretend to be a Magical Girl with some serious issues about personal space.

"Al...alright!" Deepthroat gasps as she holds up the camera again. "Webcast...c-coming online in ten! Nine..!"

Ah, what the hell. You make to put it back on - it does look good on you, anyway, when--

"Back now," Sayaka suddenly bursts into the room, the door slamming back. It's with a start that you shove the hat back into your inventory, turning to greet the Eversor. Her eyes are slightly red, but she seems fine for now. She brushes some of her bangs from her face. "Did I make it? Are we still good?" You flash her a thumbs up. "How do I look, Murderface?"

...Decent, you say to her after a moment. Totally not like she's been crying or anything.

"Thanks." She pats her cheeks with both hands, as if to wake herself up. A resigned, yet determined look on her face as she does so. "This is the worst assignment I've ever been on, but I'm not a quitter. Let's get this shit over with."

"Five! Four!"

Sure.

"...Two! One!" And with that, the entire world is watching you again. Ruri loudly and cheerfully greeting the audience, before dragging both you and Sayaka into frame, hugging you and calling you her best friends forever.

You give her a shove afterwards, before pushing the camera away from you and then stalking off-camera with a growl. Just like how Murder Mayumi would've done. This got you the usual squealing praises from Ruri, which you tried not to feel too good about. You're just...acting how you would act. Like yourself. Like...

Christ. Maybe...maybe Midori had you pegged after all.

You'd have laughed if it weren't so depressing.

Less annoying than Iori? Iori was a jerky tsundere rich bitch at first, but mellowed out really fast once we proved our worth, and pretty much has been a decent friend since minus her schoolgirl crush that we end up shitting on repeatedly.

Ruri, on the other hand, is dangerous in various ways, knows way too much, and seems to like teasing and playing with us at random, possibly for her own amusement.

Iori was positively saintly compared to what this one may put us through.

You've got to be a real bunch of scumbags to make even the mutant cat and an organization based on assassinations, purges, kidnappings, and outright destruction and looting, stop taking your jobs.

At least it should be a relaxing job where we get to blow off some steam when we purge their entire organization.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 07/05/13(Fri)08:37 No.25831757

You're a Magical Girl, and you had no idea acting as yourself can be so fucking tiring. Or irritating.

You have no illusions about how terrible of a human being you actually are, but...well. You had no idea you were this bad.

It's a mystery why people can even tolerate your presence, much more stand actually being around you. No one ever wants to be around anyone who swears too much, frowns too much, and thinks that everything that happens to her sucks forever.

And you have to keep it up for three more days.

You're not too sure if you can keep being yourself for so long.

The rest of the day had been...an eye-opener, so to speak, on what an idol of Kirishima Ruri's popularity and personality gets to on a typical day. Well, not so typical, she'd reminded you - today was to be spent generating hype for the concert tomorrow. Teasing the hordes of fans by appearances and interviews and photoshoots, to whet their appetites for the real thing.

The poolside swimsuit photoshoot was...it was certainly a part of that, you can't find a way to describe it better. You and Sayaka accompanied Ruri to the Mitakihara Community Center Pool, the entire facility seemingly having been reserved for just this shoot.

You discovered this because of the horde of fans crowding around the entrance, all of them eager to see their idol in skimpy swimwear - as well as the bawling children being comforted by their parents, grasping colorful inner tubes and water wings that would unfortunately not see use that day. You'd have pointed it out to Ruri, but you were busy elbowing a fan that got too close for comfort in the face to do so. This, of all things, got you cheers and applause and quite a bit of squealing from the crowd. Sayaka had to bodily drag you to get you walking again, you were that stunned.

The trip to the pool was also interesting. Kyosuke drove the three of you there, driving the ugliest, blockiest car you've ever seen, a huge metal block on huge metal wheels that made an ugly roar with its gas-guzzling engine. You were told that this was a an armored Hummer, built to ferry VIPs around.

...You'd have preferred Kharn's Marauder. Sure, it had skulls on the bumper and hubcaps, but it had a bit more finesse than this. It had a bit more style. But you kept your complaints to yourself - at least the route taken was secure enough, and you were also escorted by two similar vehicles, manned by half of Kyosuke's goon squad.

In any case, the trip was a quiet one. Sayaka didn't seem in the mood to talk, glaring at the rear view mirror from time to time, or checking her phone. Ruri seemed to be busy giggling and chatting quietly with someone on her phone, too, leaving you to blow cigarette smoke out the lowered window. Deepthroat had kept the camera trained on all three of you the entire time, so even if Sayaka was up to talking business, you couldn't really talk about work.

The photo shoot itself was an ordeal. Ruri had tried to get you and Sayaka into swimsuits too, which the both of you vehemently refused. You very nearly pulled a gun on her, until Sayaka took one for you by relenting. She was scowling at you and Ruri as she did it, but you have the nasty suspicion that she was actually enjoying it, from trying out several expensive-looking swimsuits to being in the shots that Ruri took.

It's here that you also saw just how...well, well-toned Sayaka is. She's even got abs, for fuck's sake, something you never really noticed, even if half her midriff is bared in her Magical Girl costume. She did have a few scars that need covering up by makeup, but other than that, even Ruri was impressed. You very nearly choked on cigarette smoke as the idol spent quite a few minutes rubbing and petting Sayaka's abdominals, making the latter blush and fidget awkwardly.

After the photoshoot was the radio interviews, and those went by pretty quick. Just some wisecrack DJs trying to flirt with Ruri, and the superidol shilling the concert. You didn't need to participate then, just stand outside the recording booth while Kyosuke and his goons covered every entrance to the small broadcasting building. Uneventful, for the most part.

You're now at Mitakihara Stadium, having arrived here half an hour ago. This time, there are no crowds to speak of - only, well, the horde of idols that Ruri's entrance seems to have interrupted in mid-rehearsal. All of them met the super idol with a smile, a cheerful greeting and a bow - but even you could detect the underlying tension in the air. You're not just sure if it's aimed at your client or you, having caught a few of the idols staring daggers at you once or twice. One of the idols in question you recognized as Miki Hoshii, the blonde who got on your case while you were trying to clear the air with Iori.

The stage the idols are performing on seem to be built right at the center of the stadium itself, its construction only very recently finished. It looks stable enough, the rigging and scaffolding for the lights and fireworks looking solid even by your inexperienced eye. More construction is ongoing even as the idols are practicing on the stage itself. Despite it being a rather pleasant day, the stadium's ordinarily open ceiling was shuttered, most probably to shield the idols from the heat.

...Speaking of which, Iori is also here, looking quite energetic despite the intense dance routines you've seen them practicing. She didn't exactly call you out and greeted you herself, but she did brighten up and waved at you as they took a brief water break. Takane also acknowledged your presence with a small, discreet smile and a nod. Chihaya, the other idol you recognize, merely stared at you in silence, before averting her eyes as if to ignore the fact that you exist.

That's...fine, really. You've had enough unwanted attention for the day, and you'd like to do something that has to do with work more than simply playing up for the camera. Thankfully, Ruri's dragged Sayaka off to the changing room to get into costume - it seems that the super idol was impressed enough with the photoshoot that Sayaka was definitely going to be included in the number. You could only hope that the Eversor provides enough of a distraction that you're saved a second time from such a fate.

Lucky, too, that Deepthroat's gone with them - or at least, that's what you last saw of the sweaty, awkward assistant. It's disturbing, sometimes, how you don't even notice she's around until you hear her stutter, or catch a whiff of sweat-dried hair.

With the rest of his goons patrolling the stadium, Kyosuke is the only other non-idol there with you. He's looking distinctly uncomfortable himself, moreso when Sayaka's around. He's standing a respectable distance away from you, while you lounge around in one of the front seats nearest to the stage. You've also caught him sneaking glances at you, as if debating whether or not to talk to you but cancelling at the last second. At least, that's what you think. You have no idea otherwise why he'd be doing that.

You lean back, letting out a sigh as you rest your feet from your heels. You wanted to smoke here, but apparently it's prohibited- some of the idols being allergic to cigarette smoke or something like that. You'd have argued that the pyrotechnics they'd be setting off during the concert would be much worse than your cigarettes, but you didn't push the point. This has been the longest day, and you're not looking for an argument. Not right now, anyway.

You take another glance around, and catch Kyosuke looking at you again. You give him one of your glares - and he quickly pales at that, turning away and looking quite sheepish. Fiddling with what appears to be a spare headset in his hands, similar to the one he's wearing now.

You shake your head and watch the idols start up their routine again. Ruri and sayaka are also there - wearing the same, flowery white gown that you'd seen Iori and the idols wearing when you met her in the coffee shop. It looks uncomfortably warm, but you have to admit Sayaka's pulling it off. She's got enough chest for it, at least, something you clearly lack. ...Not that you ever compared or anything.

Any way. You have some free time now.

What do you do?

Take all the photos we can of Sayaka

Also maybe we should try and get Mami an autographed picture or something as a souvenir. While she doesn't seem a huge fan of Ruri she does like MMxMM and Ruri is voicing Midori

Maybe an autographed copy of her script or something

Anyway while we are waiting here in between bothering Sayaka with our phone and finding out if they have any cameras recording this so we can nab a copy for Kyouko ask Kyousuke what his deal is and why our Blue friend seems to want to tear his arms off and slap him with them

On the plus side, this time around we probably won't almost get our client raped. On the negative side, our client may be secretly evil and we may be ambushed by a golden weapon user(which may in fact be our client.)

Ok, thinking about it from last thread. The presence of Kyosuke has added a further complication to this mission.

Unless Deculture has changed Kyosuke so that he was a sporty guy instead of a musician. Then Sayaka's wish has essentially failed, since she wished the use of his hand back so he can play violin again ~~and Sayaka can have gratitude sex~~ not be a security guy.

Anyway, the point is that we should keep an eye on Sayaka and Kyosuke because if we fuck up too badly then the curse of the von Seckendorffs might be realised.

~~and Kyoko will hate us forever~~

It's with an irritated grunt that you turn back towards the awkward young man and wave him towards you. He blinks at this, puzzled as he looks around, before pointing at himself, as if to ask if he was he one you were motioning to. ...Of course, who else would it be, for fuck's sake? You two are the only ones in the audience seats.

You wave him over again, and he finally gets the hint, quickly standing up from his own seat and making his way towards your row. He stands in front of you, saluting nervously yet again, like a soldier waiting to be ordered around by a superior officer. You'd have laughed at this if it weren't for the idols up on stage already giggling at him. You instead shake your head and gesture for him to take a seat, which he does - a couple of seats to your left, anyway. A respectful distance.

Somehow, you find that a relief and yet an annoyance at the same time.

"Yes, er, ma'am? Anything I could help you with?" Kyosuke asks after a few moments of painfully-awkward silence.

Well. Maybe something you could help him with, seeing as you've been catching him eyeballing you earlier. Is there something on your face, or what?

"Ahah. No, ma'am, there wasn't anything on your face. S-sorry about that, though." A nervous laugh issues from him as he shakes his head. "I was just...well, I wanted to give you the headset you were asking for, back at the hotel. All of ours are rather used, and we didn't feel that it'd be right to give a proper lady such as yourself something we've been using. So we had a new one sent over from headquarters, and...uh, here." He holds out the headset to you, reaching over the empty seat to do so. It's a sleek thing, one that clips to your ear with a thin stalk that curves outward slightly for the mic. "Set to our frequency and synchronized with our own network."

You take it from him, surprised. It's...the first time you've been considered a 'proper lady', and probably the first time anyone's taken such a thing into serious consideration. Or maybe you haven't really been around guys all that often - at least, the sort you don't gun down at first sight. You don't quite know how to respond to that, so you try to ignore it for now, clipping the headset on but not switching it on at the moment.

You do however take note of the young man's speech - how he seems to adopt a more...reserved-sounding vocabulary, at least when he's away from his comrades. In their company, you've caught him resorting to a rougher sort of language, the kind that's peppered with a lot more 'bros' and 'man' and half-hearted profanity.

He didn't answer your question, though. What's with the staring?

"Well...um, please don't take this the wrong way, ma'am, but I couldn't help it. This is the first time I've worked a high-profile security job like this. It's usually bank and prison runs for me when I'm on active duty." He manages to work up a smile despite the fact that he seems to be sweating under your gaze. "It's...well, this is the first time I've seen a Magical Girl in the flesh, ma'am. Everyone in the agency's sworn up and down that girls like you exist, but I've always been skeptical. I thought they were just...jerking the new guy around, something like that. Turns out they weren't, and..." It's then that he laughs nervously, again. "...Sorry, ma'am. I'm sure you're finding this stupid."

Huh. That's...well. You've no idea how to take this, especially from someone who you've threatened to blow their kneecaps off earlier.

How do you respond?

You let him stew in his own silence as you test the headset, switching it on. The muted, clipped conversations of the security detail coming alive at your ear. ...You have to admit, you're impressed with their radio chatter, if it could even be called that - they're not bantering to each other uselessly, but rather keeping the conversations short and quick in their team argot. Checking in with each other from time to time as they go about their patrols.

You murmur an inquiry into the mic after a few moments, hoping to catch them off guard - Kyosuke himself flinching in surprise at this - but commendably, despite you bursting into their frequency unannounced, they give you the report you asked for in no time flat. No, no intruders or unauthorized personnel spotted at the moment. No anomalies to report either, which is good.

Satisfied, you lower the volume of the headset down until it's barely audible, before turning to Kyosuke. You've half a mind to snort at him for that proper lady comment, but there's no need to make the help more uncomfortable than they already are.

You simply tell him, then, that you'll forgive him for staring if he satisfies your curiosity. He should have his eyes checked, by the way, if he's finding you something to gawk at.

"Ah...aheh. Uh, please don't take it the wrong way, ma'am. Nothing untoward. But I'll try to answer as honestly as I can."

Fine. How'd he get into this kinda job? He sounds way too sophisticated for bodyguard duty - is he one of those secretly-rich kids looking for cheap thrills by putting themselves in danger, or something? If he is, then he'd be better off cliff-diving into a volcano, stuff like that. This kind of scene needs professionals.

"Huh? Oh, er, n-no, nothing like that, ma'am!" Kyosuke shakes his head, holding up both hands. "I...well, I did have some formal training, Miss. Violinist. Back when I was still in middle school. It didn't..." He grimaces slightly, here, as if dredging up a particularly painful memory. "It didn't exactly work out. Some stuff happened, and then some more stuff after that..." He glances up at the stage, where Sayaka seems to be receiving advice from Iori and some of the idols on a particularly difficult dance move.

"...After that I decided to, uh, find another line of work, something that didn't involve scales or stuffy recitals or teachers who'd smack your fingers with a violin bow if you'd so much as get one note wrong." He laughs lamely at this, looking back down at his right hand, which is covered in a black leather glove. His other hand, strangely enough, is bare.

"A friend got me into the agency, and I tried to see if I could get in. I managed it after two tries, and I only barely got through basic training. The rest was easy after that, and now..." Kyosuke shrugs again, before smiling at you in a sheepish way. "Er, sorry, ma'am. I'm sure you're getting bored by all this. It's really nothing exciting."

Well, it isn't, but him sneaking glances at Sayaka's got you even more curious now. Is there something between him and her? Something you're not aware of?

"A-ah. I guess...I guess you can say that, ma'am." He nods reluctantly, as if confirming it by that gesture cost him quite a bit. "Are...are you friends with Miki-san, ma'am?"

How do you respond?

So how does this decu summoning thing go? I kind of get it, after reading the last few threads; it's
"Nyan nyan" X 2-5 times
"Nihao Nyan" 2-3 times
"YOU HAD ONE JOB" or variations on the phrase
Then a bunch of stuff and then Decu turns up, right?

That's how it goes?

Friends? Well. That's one way of looking at it. You've never really been friends with the blue-haired Eversor - more like barely-tolerable acquaintances on both your parts. Still, you haven't tried to kill each other lately, so...you decide to be honest about that, at least.

A small smile quirks the corner of your lips as you tell Kyosuke, offhandedly, about how you very nearly put a bullet in Sayaka's brain a few months ago. Now, she takes care of your horses.

The young man blinks at you, his face going pale. "E-er. Aheh. That's...that's a joke, isn't it, ma'am? I...I don't get it myself, but..."

You look at him, before taking a cigarette from your inventory and sticking it between your lips, unlit. It's only after a few moments of you stretching out the silence between the both of you to an uncomfortable, painful thinness that you reply.

Yeah, just a joke. You're not into horses. But if he's asking that if you're associated with Sayaka in any way, yes. She's a co-worker and a colleague. Friends...that'd be pushing it, but you won't just stand by if you see her getting harassed by anyone.

"Ah. I...I see." Kyosuke smiles a rather helpless smile, the smile a father makes when you've just told him that his daughter will never be a ballerina, due to someone having blown her knees off while you wave the smoking gun in her face. "Well, that's...that's sort of like a friend, I suppose, ma'am. I'm glad she has very good friends." The young man nods, more to himself than to you, as if to affirm something. "I've...I've always suspected something was up, but..."

But...? If he's going to say something, he should finish it, you know. You hate being kept in the dark.

"It's nothing, ma'am. If it's alright, I'd like to keep it to myself. Personal. I hope you understand." The young man shakes his head, letting out a sigh.

...Of course, but you have to know if this is going to affect the op in any way. The last thing you need is people taking things too personally and not having enough room to act professionally.

"It won't, ma'am. I promise you that."

Good. Just so the both of you are clear, then. If he's got shit to settle with Sayaka, then they should do so only when the principal's secure in her suite, never here where things could go wrong.

"I understand perfectly. Crystal clear, ma'am."

Despite his response, Kyosuke sounds absolutely wretched, and you can't help but feel just the tiniest bit bad for him, if this is at all how you think it is. Telling him about Kyoko would probably twist the knife in even further, and you heard from Midori about how some guys are into that.

Some perverts in this town.

"Well. Um. It's been good talking to you, ma'am. I'll...go on ahead and join my team on patrol." He stands up from his seat, and taps at his headset. "If you need backup or support, ma'am, just shout for us and we'll be here in ten seconds flat, maybe less. We'll contact you directly in case we find anything."

You nod at this. Sounds reasonable.

Kyosuke gives you another salute, before straightening his suit and walking off, murmuring into his mic as he does so. Now leaving you well alone with Sayaka and the idols. ...Truth be told, Sayaka's actually getting along fairly well with them, even when she seemed to be completely disillusioned about them earlier. She's even giggling, now, as Ruri practices some steps with her with an exagerrated flair, their hands on each other's waists.

What do you do now? Seems they'll be taking a break soon. To the side of the stage, Deepthroat's sitting by herself, on the floor, sniffing as she despondently nibbles on a sandwich. A half-empty water bottle on her lap. The camera has also been turned off for now.

What do you do?

You decide to go ahead and talk to Deepthroat. You approach the stage by the side, so as not to interrupt the dance routine currently being practiced - and you sit beside the sniveling girl, as quietly as you could possibly manage. Both your legs dangling off the lip of the stage. She doesn't seem to have noticed you yet, seemingly so focused on her snack, as if trying to savor the pitiful little sandwich with every fiber of her being.

It's only after she's halfway through her sandwich - the filling seems to be a very thin spread of cheese and mayonnaise - that you tap her shoulder, carefully. Deepthroat very nearly shrieks at this, her hands reaching up to slap over her mouth as she turns to you with ringed eyes wide with fear. She shrieks again as her eyes focus on you, but this is muffled by her hands, so all it amounts to is a feeble, drawn-out whimper.

...You're not sure if you've met anyone as jumpy, as twitchy, or as nervous as her. Eveen Midori wasn't this twitchy during her first few days with you, and she knew first-hand how you were like. You wait for her to get her wits back about her, though, and she manages to compose herself enough to drop her hands to her lap.

"I...um...c-can I help you with anything, Miss Matsuda? Do...do you want something to eat? M-maybe some coffee...?" She manages to whimper this out after a few moments, her large green eyes fearful and glistening, as if just about to burst into tears.

N-no. No, you don't want anything. You just thought she'd want some company, seeing as she's by herself right now...

"M-me? You wanted to...keep me company?" Deepthroat squeaks, before shaking her head slowly. "H-heh, p-please don't make jokes, Miss Matsuda..."

You're...you're not trying to be funny. You just noticed her eating by herself, and she looked like she needed someone to talk to.

Oh.

She'd dropped her sandwich in her shock at seeing you, along with her water bottle. The sandwich, having fallen apart at the impact, was further destroyed by the water bottle emptying itself on top of it, turning it into a slurry white mess.

". . ."

Silence. Utter silence.

How...how do you react, again?

...You're sorry about that, you tell her. That's...that's completely your fault.

"I-it's..." Deepthroat is crying now, frank tears dripping down her cheeks and nose, but desperately trying to smile. "It's nothing. D-don't...don't worry about it. It's just a s-s-sand...sandw-wich...

...Making Midori cry is a close second, and no doubt finding out about what you REALLY did to Pinky to break her so much would leave you completely wretched - but this is probably the first time you've felt absolutely horrified at what you've done. Just as you press a handkerchief into her hand to clean her face with, it's with urgency and speed that you get up back onto your feet, approaching one of the stage hands milling about by the stage. You've no time to act nice here - you grab him by the collar with one hand and point at the tearful Noriko with the other. Saying that he needs to run out and buy her a lunch sandwich as fast as he can.

"Miss, I...I can understand your urgency, really," the stagehand is trying to protest, obviously, but he's already disturbed by how a girl an entire foot shorter is currently manhandling him by his shirt. "But I need to be here in case they need me--"

He's already needed!Now he'll do as you say, or...or you'll shoot his kneecaps off. Yes. You'll do that.

"Ah. Incentive. I can work with that." The stagehand gulps. "Al...alright, alright. I'll go and get some food. There's a concessionary just outside, I can--"

You shut him up by shoving a few thousand yen notes into his hand and shoving him in the direction of the nearest exit. Mami had given you a money clip of banknotes at the start of the mission, just in case you needed some pocket money and didn't exactly need to bust out your cash card.

>> ☐ The Tale of Arturia Pendragon: A King Must Stand Alone - Ch. 1 Arturia Pendragon 07/05/13(Fri)14:14 No.25834889

My name is Arturia Pendragon, though you've likely surmised as much. Until recently, the Equerry to the High Inquisitor of the Second, Her Holiness Gertrud von Egisheim, and known by and large as Her Majesty the King, though it refers not to the country as such, or any country in particular, so much as it implies a certain Divine Right; to be the King means to carry the blood of a Ruler of Men, who stands above the authority of all but God and the Lady.

My bloodline is not the subject of this story, for now, though in some time it will be. This is a story instead of Heresy most foul, of a veil obscuring the hearts and minds of the finest magical girls in the world. Of a foolish young woman who, in her pride and naiveté, averted her eyes from the Truth for far too long to stop its inevitable march.

This is my story, and the story of my honored sister, and of the Blessed Lady and the Holy Second Inquisition. I would like to say it began quite a while ago, with my sister's ascension to the head of the Holy Fourteenth Officio – the claiming of her birthright as Emperor – but for brevity's sake, I will begin much later than that, with the Heresy of the Ninth Warmaster under the looming of Walpurgisnacht. Looking back now, even before that wretched night, it was the stone in the pond that would send out ripples for months to come.

"I apologize. I apologize on behalf of Kharn, and on behalf of the Ninth Officio. But there's really only so much I can do." Her voice-disruptor made her apology sound halfhearted, casual. That could have been the seething, foaming rage that I had barely kept contained, however. It wouldn't do to get angry at an Angel of the Blessed Lady, and though she dismissed Her Grace's torment so casually, she was hardly at fault.

"It was inevitable. It's kind of something Kharn does. It…I'm sorry, do you…need to use the bathroom?"

My sword hand clenched reflexively. It was not 'inevitable'. Her Grace was, until she was violated some hours ago, a pure maiden – the very model of a magical girl. For a second-long eternity, I simply bit my lip (nearly hard enough to draw blood, I would say), torn between the duty of defending my lady and respecting the authority of an objective superior in the ranks of the Blessed Lady.

I set my jaw as my eyes flicked toward where I could only assume hers were, and as calmly as I could, I began to elucidate the Angel on Her Grace's virtue, and the importance of vigilance and care in our daily lives as magical girls, so as not to cast ourselves from the razor-thin line on which we walked. Surely, she knew this better than even I did, but the Ninth Warmaster clearly needed more than a simple reminder. She walked a Witch's path already, and even in the event that she did not fall, surely her distinct and unsettling lack of virtue would-

After a scant few phrases, thirty seconds at most, something reflected in Lady Malal's visor caught my eye – a flash of a silver-haired girl, shorter than even the Japanese in front of me, chest puffed out and mouth moving silently in time with my speech.

It was Raleigh, of course. Raleigh Alondight, the High Marshal of the Black Templars, known to most simply as the Black Knight. She was Her Grace's most trusted friend, myself aside, and held the distinction of being the most distinguished low-blooded magical girl in the Second's illustrious history, dating well before the Officio Assassinora were officially sanctioned. She was also quite determined to test my already terribly thin patience today, it seemed.

I resisted the urge to backhand her as I whirled around – an urge that came up unreasonably often with Raleigh, and one I truly believe only a noble-born woman could resist so often. She gave me a wide grin and a little wave, though judging from the look in her eyes, I suspect that for whatever unfathomable reason, this was calculated. Raleigh was not often a fool, despite repeated evidence to the contrary.

"You know she was the one that invited the Warmaster into her chambers, don't you?" her quiet, lilting voice sang a song that seemed to be designed specifically to get under my skin. "You weren't protecting her, Arty. You walked in on her."

My sword hand twitched again.

"She hasn't left it, you know. Thankfully, the Warmaster was there to comfort her. It's great, she does this thing with her tongue…" As she stuck out her own tongue and began trying to imitate some arcane motion, I found myself oddly hypnotized by the prospect. I could nearly grasp what she was trying to do, but…that wasn't normal. It couldn't be, not even Elizabeth – not even Elcarys – could perform such an act.

…Maybe Elcarys could have, but I wouldn't want to be the one to find out, and were I to ask Raleigh, I was certain I would hear in excruciatingly uncomfortable detail just precisely how far that tongue could go.

(Neither of those are people you need yet concern yourself with – all will be explained in time, though not today, and sooner rather than later. It would be rude to simply toss names about with no promise of explanation.)

It occurred to me all too late that I was in the middle of an important clarification, but when I looked to the Culexus, she was well on her way down the hall, attention wholly absorbed by the electronic assistant she carried. Raleigh gave a snigger and a shout, a 'You're welcome!' that echoed through the halls of the Officio. I tried to wither her reckless enthusiasm with a glare, but she laughed all the harder.

"Arty. Arty, you really haven't got a clue, have you? Well, don't worry. I'm sure she didn't really think you had to use the bathroom. Kings don't poop, and all." We do so-Why is this even up for discussion.

I adjusted my glasses, my hand drifting without pause to my temple to fend off an oncoming headache. I didn't expect professional behavior from the High Marshal without direct Witch involvement, but she could have at least taken pains not to make us look even worse than this ridiculous scandal already had, thanks to the heretical mongrel leading the Ninth Officio Assassinorum. Why Lady Malal isn't simply leading the Officio-

"You're doing that thing again. Where you talk to yourself."

I was talking to her.

"Well. I wasn't listening, because you were doing that thing again. No disrespect intended, Your Majesty, but you need to calm down. They'll be gone tomorrow, then you'll have only one superior to tiptoe around again, and we can put this particular bout of minor heresies behind us. Speaking of tiptoeing around superiors…" She turned stiffly toward the hall opposite where Lady Malal had gone, and began to march, pausing after a moment to beckon me after her. "She needs to talk to you."

…Ah, Milady is finally in a condition to speak?

"No, I'm going to get her to unlock the door, and you're going to shove in before she can close it. May want to strap your armor on, Her Grace is still quite handy with the lightning."

This boded well already.

“Imbecile! Fool! Dastard! Deviant! Heretic!” I was grateful, I supposed, that she only had a few pillows to hurl at me, when she saw my face, though with the tone she used, her words hissed out through cracked and broken voice, I expected divine lightning instead. Her voice squeaked as the parade of insults moved on, the High Inquisitor’s face glowing a bright red, as though her head threatened to explode at any moment.

Though she had elected to remain outside, I could swear I heard Raleigh laughing through the door.

Her Grace – just Gertrud, in our younger days – had always been temperamental. She is, despite that, one of the cleverest and most charismatic people I’ve ever the privilege of knowing, to be sure, and…certainly, she is among the people I care for the most in this world.

That said, I have met nobody since that could throw such a tantrum over nothing as Gertrud, when she was so inclined, which seemed to be most any time we were alone. I suppose how angry she seemed was a measure of trust, in a way; only recently had she allowed herself to show her anger in front of Raleigh, having previously only done so in front of my sisters and I. Never in front of the other knights, not even when we were trainees, and certainly not in front of the Lady’s Messenger.

One would be hard-pressed to believe that under her smooth and graceful countenance was the heart of an incorrigible, offensive, pillow-hurling brat.

“WHAT?” She squeaked so loudly that I was certain the window-glass cracked. …I repeated myself, louder. Perhaps she hadn’t heard it.

“How…how DARE you! HIGH MARSHAL! RALEIGH! I know you’re out there! Throw this foul, perverted heretic in the dungeon!” I breathed a sigh of relief, exaggerated…mostly out of pettiness, I admit. It was only the dungeon, she couldn’t have been that upset.

At that, she made a noise, one for which I had come to know her – a high, unexplainable sound, a combination of a cracked scream and a squeak. A small buzz began to tug at the edge of my senses as Her Grace crackled, her hair standing lightly on end. Like a cat’s, come to that.

If Raleigh WAS out there, she had (wisely) deemed it safer not to get involved, and for that I was grateful.

I strode over to Her Grace’s – to Gertrud’s – bedside, as she crackled and squeaked, and as she raised her hand to smite me, I took it in both of mine, then dropped to a knee. She had my sincerest apologies for the misunderstanding. I had only feared the worst, with the Warmaster Valnikov’s continual heresy.

Her fury seemed to dissipate all at once, though her face still carried a cherry-red color. Her hackles dropped, and the numb, buzzing sensation in the depths of my heart was… …Well, at very least the electricity seemed to subside. Gertrud stared down at me, seemingly unsure how to respond.

…This was the real reason I was grateful Raleigh had left. This expression was one reserved for me, and one I would gladly claim for myself.

“…I don’t…need you to come running whenever you believe something may happen to me. I’m a Warmaster, you know. The High Inquisitor of the Second. The voice of the Blessed Lady’s will. I have no need of foolish kings that play at gallantry.” She squeezed my hand as she answered, her eyes flicking toward a distant corner of the room that was no doubt extremely heretical at that particular moment.

Of course, Your Grace.

We've been constantly in need of more info, or to relay some important bits of discoveries, whatever, and we'd either :
-Call coobs, which I'm kinda reluctant to since, well, it's coobs
-Call Mami, which I'm also reluctant to since it's necessarily gonna bother her at one point.
Why not assign somebody to that particular job? Monitoring squads and stuff, see? So we don't bother them each time we need to know something, and they could oversee the progression of pretty much any squad on the field.
Frankly, I'd be surprised if a similar system wasn't already set up.
Moreover, it's a good excuse to introduce a new character or two.

The rest of the day passed without incident, mercifully, and we spent it in discussion of personal matters, a rarity as of late. The next few weeks would have us tied up in meetings, thanks in no small part to the Ninth Officio's recent and extremely unusual fascination with Siberia, to say nothing of the looming Walpurgisnacht.

Almost worse, so I thought at the time, was the inevitable diplomatic mission to the Palace of the Holy Emperor in Rome, to request their aid as a second line against the flood of Witches that would pour from the Akashic Points scattered around the country. It would be yet another chance to see our officers poisoned with hedonism, to see my sister tear Her Grace from her sacred mission for the sake of vanity and sloth, and, though I would never have admitted it then, another opportunity for Nero to highlight my own inadequacies in a feast of gold and excess.

In light of that…it felt as though Walpurgisnacht could not come soon enough.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You ask Deepthroat about her little brother. You don't have any family yourself, as far as you can remember - it's always been only Mami, really, not that you've got any problem with that.

...Kyoko you might consider as an annoying, goofy older sister who takes it upon herself to drag you into being social with people. Sayaka - maybe - as her annoying friend next door who liked to kick you around and made you eat dirt that one time, until you got angry enough to tackle her into the ground and punch out a few of her front teeth with a couple of wild swings that hurt you more than it did her.

...It's not often that you wonder how you could have turned out with even a halfway-normal childhood. Or if you even did have one, and the amnesia'd simply wiped that slate clean.

"M-my...my brother?" Deepthroat squeaks. "U-um. He's...well, let me show you, I have a few...photos..." The sweaty girl grunts a bit as she pulls out her smartphone from her skirt pocket. She taps impatiently on the screen for a couple of moments, before gingerly turning the screen towards you. "S-see?"

She shouldn't need her blouse--

"It's okay, just let me..."

...Huh. It did work. Enough for you to make out the image of a beady-eyed young man frowning at the camera, his lips stretched in a thin line of annoyance.

"He...he's taller than me, now. Even though he's only at his sophomore year at middle school, haha..." Deepthroat's laugh is a weedy, breathless sort. "He looks mean, but he's really nice when...when you get to know him. See, doesn't he look cute here...?"

Ruri's assistant slides a finger across her phone's screen, flipping to another photo while making a grimy line across the surface.

"A-ah, that's a bit of a bad picture, heh, heh...I snuck into his room to take it." Deepthroat murmurs. She...well, you're sure you didn't imagine the note of pride in her voice when she said that. "We...we used to fight a lot, when I was still studying. He...he started being nicer when I got this job, though..."

Being Ruri's assistant?

"N-no..." Noriko blinks at you, looking hurt. "Being...being an idol..."

How do you react?

Being the current object of affection for an insane eldritchian goddess with a fetish of hand-fucking your chest until she can rip out your heart with her claws, not many things shock you, now. Well, besides gradually finding out just what kind of phenomenon Midori's made with her...manga about you, and Kharn's adventures. Still, just a few.

But finding out that Deepthroat is an idol...well, it's pretty up there. Considering that the group of girls now watching Ruri instruct Sayaka on how to dip without showing too much cleavage is some of the most...well, well-put-together girls you've seen. They're pretty, they can hold a note, they can dance, they can probably chew gum and talk at the same time. They don't stutter, they aren't as sweaty, and they probably give their hair a good washing once every day. Possibly.

But Deepthroat...? It's...well. It's like finding out that Sayaka actually has a crush on you, or something.

Despite this, you seem to manage hiding your shock enough that she just takes the gormless look you must have right now as confusion. "A-ah, you're...you're probably wondering why I...I'm not up there with Ruri-sama dancing, huh?"

You nod, and it's here that you get a stilted primer on the myriad of idols currently circulating Japan's music and entertainment industry. There's of course the super-popular idols that you see and hear about, like Kirishima Ruri and Minase Iori, who use their skills in singing and dancing to garner fans and make money. Then there are the face idols, who are marketed strictly for their looks. Fashion idols, girls who look good no matter what they wear. Cosplay idols, who make every otaku's wet dream come true. JAV idols, hobby idols, mascot idols...there's an entire rainbow of idols.

And then there's Deepthroat. "I'm...I'm an M idol," Noriko takes out a calling card from her skirt pocket. ...Amazingly, it's not crumpled or damp or ripped. It has her entire name, Karasawa Noriko, printed neatly in a delicate off-white square, tastefully thick. It's even got a watermark.

"M idols are...um, basically, it's kind of like acting in front...o-of a whole crowd. People pay to see me and...w-well, bully me, kind of. Just...shout at me, to get their stress levels down. Sometimes...sometimes they throw stuff."

...What? So she's an idol people pay to abuse?

"Some...something like that." It's here that she looks up at you, and her dark-ringed eyes widen. "N-no, nothing violent...! They don't hit me, o-or anything. Just...makes me a way to vent f-frustration. I...I apologize to them so they feel like whoever made them angry in the first place is apologizing to them, and they feel better about it..."

Wow. That's...wow. You didn't even know something like that could exist, much less be something that people actually pay for. ...Does she have a lot of fans?

Noriko, for the first time, seems to smile brightly at this. "Y-yes! It's...it's a small group, but I have...I have two thousand fans following me. Some of them are...are actually businessmen and salarymen, w-who probably get shouted at a lot by their bosses, or something..." She giggles soundlessly. "N-not to toot my own trombone - I let my fans do that, t-tee hee - but I'm...I'm the second best M idol there is."

...Well. Good for her.

Deepthroat nods. "T-there are S idols, y-yeah. It's...if you've got a certain look to you, it's usually where you get to start your career." She turns to glance at the idols. "L-like, Ruri-sama, she started being an S idol. Back then, she wore her hair long, with...with the hime cut." The sweaty girl traces a line on her forehead with a finger, just above her eyebrows. "D-down to here, so all you could see was her eyes glaring at you." Noriko smiles here, if a bit sadly. "She was...the best, for a while. Didn't like it very much, so she changed her image to look more friendly."

Ah. That's the twintails, probably.

The girl nods. "Y-yeah. Uh...let's see...ah, see the idol over there, just behind Ruri-sama, with the red hair and blue eyes?"

The one with the look like she's about to tell you to grind your face into the mud while she grinds the spiked heel of her shoe into the base of your spine?

"Y-yeah. That's Mappi-sama. She's the best S idol in the market today. In the same...production company as Ruri-sama. They're sort of rivals, or...or at least Mappi-sama likes to think so." Noriko leans closer to you, as if to share a personal secret. You catch the whiff of mayo in her breath. "...Ruri-sama thinks s-she's stupid, h-hahaha..."

Idol rivalry. Not the first time you've heard of it.

"It's...it's prett common." Noriko doesn't seem to be leaning away. In fact, it's as if she's getting comfortable, sticking so close to you like this. "D-did you know Miss Iori was...a-also an S idol? She also got...the t-top spot, for a bit."

Well. You didn't know that. ...Suppose that's how Ruri and Iori got into speaking terms, or at least you think.

"Y-you could probably be a good one if...if you tried, Miss Matsuda," Deepthroat murmurs, now smiling as she leans her head on your shoulder, uncomfortably close. "...You've...you've got the same kind of stare that Ruri-sama had when she would go Super S. The stare that'd make...a-anyone grovel and eat dirt just to lick your boots..."

...That's...that's good to know? Probably?

Clearing your throat, you try to distract her with a few more questions. Did...did she ever want to be just a normal idol, then? Not an... M idol?

"I..." Deepthroat blinks at this, before nodding. "I...I probably did? B-but I don't think I can handle...something like that." She smiles a drippy, pathetic smile. "I-it's hard enough t-to...go on M shows and speak to an audience. Dancing a-and singing..." She shakes her head. "C-can't. Can't do that."

Ah. Well. If she's happy where she is, then...then maybe that's enough.

You hear a few giggles and stifled laughter aimed at your back. Most probably, the peanut gallery that is the idols have seen this little scene, and are making fun. Well, too bad. You're...you're not even hearing them.

It's when you start contemplating about stopping time to escape when the attendant, red-faced and sweating through his work clothes, comes up to deliver the packed sandwich lunch you'd asked him for. ...It's one of those foot-long sandwiches, with vegetables and cheese and cold cuts. Subway, apparently.

"H-here you go...! Miss Matsuda...! I...I ran all the way here!" The attendant wheezes at you, thrusting the packed sandwiches and the receipt into your hands. You allow him to stagger off and collapse somewhere else, and you give the sandwiches to Deepthroat, whose eyes go wide again.

"Ruri-sama doesn't eat a whole lot..." Noriko shakes her head. "She doesn't eat bread, either. Empty carbs." She gives you the wrapped half of the sandwich. "H-here. Um. Miss Sayaka looks hungry, a-anyway. Or...or maybe her boyfriend?"

We need to have a talk with that boy again, he told us there wasn't an issue here, now we're told that he's her boyfriend? I sense a conflict of interests, if it comes down to protecting Sayaka or Ruri, we need to make sure he has his priorities straight or replace him.

"Er...w-well, um, back at the Hotel, just before we left..." Deepthroat twiddles her thumbs, here. "W-when I went to change the camera's batteries?"

Yes. You went for a brief bathroom break on your own, then.

"I saw Miss Sayaka go out and grab the arm of that guard guy, f-from earlier." She looks up at you, eyes wide, and you see her swallow nervously. "Dragged him behind a wall a-and...I didn't catch what they were saying, they were whispering and stuff...b-but I did hear Miss Sayaka cry a bit."

. . .Huh. That's...yeah. That's good to know.

You turn slightly to catch Sayaka at the corner of your vision. She seems to be having fun in the dance number. In fact, it seems that she's got the dance down pat, and the idols are the ones trying to keep up with her. Not that they have a chance, anyway, seeing as Eversors are trained to have excellent coordination and muscle memory.

Now, it's to say here that you're not one to...butt in on other people's business, as it is. You absolutely despise anyone else getting their business all up in yours. But...well. The prospect of there being trouble in the paradise that is Kyoko and Sayaka's relationship? It's not something you want to happen. Sure, you want Blueberry to die a horrible nasty death, but most of the time the only thing stopping you is not wishing that kind of grief on Kyoko.

Still...this could just be a misunderstanding. Noriko didn't hear anything...concrete, did she?

"N-no," Noriko shakes her head. "Nothing like that, Miss Matsuda. I...I guess I just jumped into conclusions like that, huh? I'm...I'm sorry." She lowers her head. "I should...I should just kill myself, huh?"

What? What's she...no. No, she shouldn't. That's fine. She should just...keep it to herself, for now. And she should start eating her sandwich before it goes bad.

"O-okay. I'll do that, Miss Matsuda."

...You kind of understand why people would pay money to bully someone like her.

You make to leave, before something catches at your memory. A question you've been meaning to ask.

Does Noriko know anything about that fan that died two years ago, in Santa Destroy?

"Huh? O-oh. That." It's here that Noriko seems to close up, a bit. "T-that...w-well, there's a lot of crazy people in...in Santa Destroy, Miss Matsuda. I...I was still training to be an M idol here when that happened." She shakes her head. "E-even the magical girls there are crazy...b-besides, they did already identify the body, right?"

"T-thank you, Miss Matsuda."

What do you do, now?

We locate the best possible sniping spot, and then we look around for another good spot, which has a good view of that spot and the stage. That is where we get set up - we're good enough that we can still cover the stage from a slightly less advantageous position, and we'll be able to counter-snipe anyone who sets up in the obvious position.

You decide to scope out the stadium on your own, for a while. You leave Deepthroat Sayaka's half of the sandwich, asking her to give it to the Eversor as soon as she can take a break. You also ask her for her number, and if you could get the schedule for her M shows.

"H-huh? You're...you're interested in those?" Deepthroat blinks up at you, cheeks crimsoning. "U-uh, I...I didn't think you'd be into that too, M-Miss Matsuda, but..." She looks down at her lap for a moment, before nodding. "I-if you'll give me your number, I'll...I'll send you the schedule. I have a few gigs next week, so..."

You gave her your number, and she did send you a schedule of her M shows indeed. You save the message and her number, and walk off - but not after meeting Sayaka's eyes and nodding. She merely frowns at you, before jerking her head to the side, signaling you to get lost.

Fine, maybe you will. It'd do you good to stretch your legs, get some actual work done.

The stadium is huge. Just exploring it takes some considerable legwork. But you're not going to be doing a penetration test of the place - you're just looking for the choice sniping spots, places in the stadium where someone with a rifle could conceivably land a shot at a target of his own choosing. Pinpointing them would give you an idea of where to put the squad of Vindicares QB's going to give you. At the very least, you'd have enough overlapping eyes to warn you in advance if they find anything amiss.

It's in your journey to find these vantage points that you decide on giving Kyoko a call. Not to micromanage or anything, but just to check upon her, see how she's doing with Midori.

You pull out your smartphone and hold it up to your ear as you climb up some rather steep steps. Kyoko picks up after the second ring, and she's...well, energetic as always. "Yo! Hey, Murderface, what's up? Hahaha, having fun with your harem of idols or what?"

How do you respond?

Mami falls into that role about now as secretary.

We could get someone but I'm not sure if Kumatora will want that sort of position or if shes even suited for that role.

Fun? Well. Sure. If you can call stopping yourself from shooting your client in the face, then yes, you're having tons of fun.

...Wait. Does that mean she's watching the stream, too? And how's Midori? Has Kyoko set her on fire yet?

"Hah! Oh, yeah, we are! Kyuubey lent me Kharn's Marauder for today's legwork! Kinda, uh, hard to get used to the stick shift, but it's got pretty cool stuff, like its own internet connection! We've been watching the entire thing on the windshield, it's crazy!" A rumble of a supercharged beast of an engine drowns out Kyoko's excited speech for a moment. "Something on the dashboard beams the entire thing onto the glass, like some sorta hologram!...'Course, the webcast's showing nothing but commercials at the moment, but--"

You cut Kyoko off here. You forgot that she can be a bit excitable with technology she doesn't quite understand (moreso when she thinks it's awesome). You ask her again how's Midori, and if she's been used as a distraction yet.

"...Man, you're not gonna let me live that down, huh?" Kyoko's tone of voice turns momentarily petulant, before she laughs. "Naw, I told you! I promised you I wouldn't, after all! If I'm gonna need a distraction I'd set somebody else on fire!" A moment. "She's fine, though! She's right here if you wanna talk. Hey, Midorin! It's Murderface, she's really worried about ya and stuff!"

...Yeah, thanks, Kyoko.

"Ah, thank you, Miss Kyoko," You hear Midori reply, a smile in her voice, albeit a nervous one. You growl underneath your breath as you duck under some metal scaffolding - you've climbed as far as the bleacher steps will take you, giving you a sort of a bird's eye view of the entire stadium. Of course, there are the VIP boxes, the commentator boxes, and the rigging for the lights if you wanted to get any higher. Those would be...perfect vantage spots for Vindicare, at least. "Ah, hello? Sempai, are you there?"

Yes, you're here. How's the op with Kyoko going?

"Not too bad, sempai," Midori reports. "We're just pursuing leads at the moment. Interviewing people and witnesses and such. We're on the way to talk to a few of the missing girl's classmates." There's a bit of an awkward pause. "U-um, sempai, I saw the...uh, what Kirishima-san and Minase-san were practicing. I...I was going to tell you about all of it, I promise I was..."

How do you respond?

"Huh? Oh, n-no, sempai! I didn't - I mean, I knew the publisher was going to contract somebody huge for the main roles, b-but I didn't know that they were going to be Minase-san and Kirishima-san!" A clear note of panic makes Midori's voice tremble. "P-please, sempai, you have to believe me! I didn't mean for you to stumble on a scene like that--"

You shake your head, allowing yourself a small, resigned smile, before replying. It's fine, you tell her. You've...well, you've accepted this, really. Not like you could do anything to stop it. But even if you could do anything, well...it's her hard work that got her into this kind of level, and you're proud of her, for what it's worth. You just want to know about any other surprises regarding Miracle Midori x Murder Mayumi, just to better prepare yourself or everything.

"Are...you're angry at me, aren't you, sempai?"

What? No. No, you're not. ...This is just how you normally sound to everyone. Yes.

"If...if you say so." There's the unmistakable sound of a hiccup from Midori, before she exhales her breath in a tremulous sigh. "Then, I...besides this, sempai, there really isn't anything. I mean, the OVA is going to be a full three season thing, and that's just for the first arc..."

"And I think they're going to start to put out actual licensed action figures for it soon, since everything else has been fan-created garage kits and customs..."

"Oh, and there's the thing with the videogame adaptation--"

. . .Right. Okay. You're...just how much money is going into this, anyway? And how much money is she going to make?

Midori seems to pause at this. "H-honestly, sempai? Not a whole lot. I mean, it's just one thing along with a lot of others - Miracle Midori's not the first of its kind to get this kind of deal, sempai, and there are bigger franchises out. But it's enough, sempai. I'm...well, I'm just happy it's getting to this kind of stage."

Well. You're happy for her, as you've said. What's she going to do with the money?

"Set aside enough for me to retire, sempai," Midori replies happily. "A-and, I suppose, have enough for my parents to retire too. My Dad's getting on in his years, and I don't want him making ramen forever."

Ah. Right. Midori's a nice kid.

Well, she is. Anyway. Can she give the phone back to Kyoko?

"Sure, sempai. Hold on a moment."

A moment later, and Kyoko's loud, annoying voice is on. "Yeah, Murderface? What is it?"

Well. Did Kyoko know that M idols exist? The kind of idols that--

"--people use as stress balls, that kinda thing? Yeah! Didn't you know that?" Kyoko replies, incredulously. "Never met one, but I heard about 'em. I think Sayaka-chan auditioned to be the other kind, the S idol kind? She didn't make it. She got too scary, the test guy pissed his fuckin' pants! Ahahaha!"

Hahaha...ha. Yeah, that's...you could see that happening.

"A-anyway, uh, Murderface, can I ask you something serious?"

"Is...is anyone puttin' the moves on Sayaka there? I mean, I'm not tryin' to be possessive or something, but...you know those idol chicks, right?"

Right.

I've been speculating about our Time Hax, and I thought of something vaguely relevant.
When we used STR, we got her power through the Bangles, namely her supermassive strength.
So, if we learn to use Kirika's Blade... could we combine her time-slowing ability with our time-stopping ability to get more use out of our limited time-stop duration?

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You squint down from your place at the bleachers, and wonder just how easy it is to shoot your main objective from your current position. Even from this distance, picking out Kirishima Ruri is easy - none of the other slightly-blurry blobs sported quite the mane of brilliant blue-green hair. It'd be an easy affair, really, to put a round in between those cute twintails.

"Murderface?" Kyoko's voice crackles slightly, bringing you back from your contemplation of cathartic screeching idol murder. "Murderface, ya still there? Midorin, check if the call's dropped or anythin'--"

You tell her that you're still on the line. Yes, you know about idols, even if you wish you didn't. So far, though, it doesn't look like any of them have any designs on the blue-haired Eversor, although there was a bit of fawning over Sayaka's abs.

"Huh? Oh, yeah! Saw that in the webcast, too. Haha, you just made Midorin lose two thousand yen, she bet that you'd join in and wear a swimsuit too."

What? No. You're not...you may have amnesia, but you're not into that kind of thing. How'd she even arrive at that conclusion anyway?

You hear an embarrassed mumbling in the background. "Ah, Midorin says she thought you'd be professional enough to play along, ahahaha!"

...No. You're professional, but not that professional. You're not in the business of squeezing into something that barely even covers everything supposed to be covered.

More mumbling, but this time panicked.

"Ah, she ain't angry, relax." Kyoko snickers. "Anyway, you're sure of that, huh? None of those sneaky idols tryin' to catch her attention or anything?"

No. None of them. At least, that's what you think.

"Haah. Well, that's a relief." The Eversor heaves a sigh. "Sometimes I just get worried, you know?"

Yeah.

...Should you tell Kyoko about Kyosuke?

Yukari and Yuuka from Touhou are an example; they're often called Yukarin and Yuukarin, respectively. Which confuses a lot of people due to the similarity in spelling and pronunciation.
I've also seen 'rin' added to names already ending in 'rin'. Another Touhou example; Orin -> Orinrin.

You decide to tell Kyoko about Kyosuke. While it doesn't feel right to meddle in someone else's affairs, even if that someone is a blue-haired bitch who's made it clear time and again that she'd like nothing more than making a pincushion of your kidneys the moment she catches you unaware - it feels even less right to keep something from the red-haired Eversor that's tried her very best to be your friend, or something approaching it.

"Kyosuke? Kamijou Kyosuke?" Kyoko repeats after a moment, surprise evident in her voice. "What's he doing there? Giving string backup or what?"

...No. Well, backup of a sort, but not the sort she's thinking about.

"No shit? You're telling me he's one of the security detail, too? A-and he's huge?" It's then that she guffaws. "Aw, man! Now I definitely have to drop by later! It's been years since I saw that idiot! And if he's huge, that means he took my advice and everything! I've never found anyone stupid enough to do THAT!"

...What? She...Kyoko told a violinist to get huge and work as a professional meathead? What the hell is wrong with her?

"Huh? Oh, no! Kyosuke-kun's a friend of mine, we go way back! Childhood buddies even!" You can hear the Eversor cheerfully reminiscing in her tone. "Wimpy little dude, limp-wristed and everything. Couldn't even take a single punch! But anyway, ah, I just helped him think hard about things, that's all. Asked him if he was happy goin' to recitals and practicin' for hours and shit, in a stuffy old concert hall." Another guffaw. "'Course that was after hearin' about him complain about how boring all of it was. Said he couldn't stand to play another bar of Vivaldi, something like that."

...And that led to him being huge?

...Huh. Okay. That's...well.

Wait, she's coming over here? But what about her op?

"Eh, it'll just be a stop over. Sayaka wants me to bring her some clothes an' something extra. After that Midorin and I go directly to a stakeout, got a hunch some of the small fry yakuza could tell us something." It's here that she cackles. "Hahaha, Kyo-chan's gonna get a pounding! This picture got me thinking...

You can't summon a god or transcendent being as a Servant, because only people who died as humans qualify as a Heroic Spirit, so the Godoka version is out.

But normal Magical Girl Madoka really doesn't have much that could qualify as a Noble Phantasm, and the most notable thing about her story is really Homura...

Would her Phantasm be Unlimited Homura Works? ~~The Grail lists it as "Unlimited Murderface Works" as some kind of sick joke, so even Madoka doesn't know what the fuck it does until she actually uses it.~~

It's not that you're trying to be a party pooper, here. You're the last person to poop on anyone else's party. But if it's possible, you'd like the head of the security detail here to not be hospitalized, or killed. At least, not until after the op itself is done.

"Ah, that's fine! Just a friendly tap in the stomach, nothing permanent! I won't be transformed either, so it'll be fine!"

...Right. Just so she knows.

Anyway, you go on to tell her about the incident with the Tojo Group, earlier. If she's going to run down some yakuza later, then she may as well be prepared to come up against Magical Girl backup.

"...Really? Huh. The last yak job I took was from them. Nice guys, really, but a bit too obsessed with becoming legit if you ask me." A grunt. "If they're messing about with the Tenth, well, that's their decision, but I bet Kyuubey's pissed about that."

"Alright. Thanks for the tip, Murderface. I'll make sure to watch out. Yaks won't even get within ten feet of Midorin, don't you worry!"

...You appreciate it, but you haven't even asked about that.

"Ha! I knew you were gonna, anyway!"

Dammit.

...Well, that reminds you. Can Kyoko hand the phone over to Midori for a moment?

"Sure, hold on." A pause, and you hear Kyoko snickering as the phone is passed over. "Ah, yes, sempai?" Midori's voice comes on. "Something you'd like me to bring in our stopover?"

It's going to be a bit delicate here, but you need to tell Midori about Iori, and what could happen if they met.

Actually, come to think of it, we can probably assume Iori wouldn't recognize Midori at all.

After all, she's voicing Murder Mayumi in the MMxMM OVA. Which means she's probably seen at the very least some concept/promotional art. Which means she probably knows what the character Miracle Midori looks like.

If Iori had gotten a good look at Midori's real appearance during the rape incident and remembered it, I highly doubt she'd be remotely willing to voice a character who is romantically involved with a character that looks uncannily like the magical girl who nearly got her raped.

Well, no, you think you're good with everything. There's just something you need to tell her in advance.

"A-ah, I see. Well, what is it then, sempai?" Midori's voice is the same as it always is, except you could hear a bit of nervousness to it. You do your best to ignore it as you plough on ahead - this is important, after all, and you can't afford to half-ass it.

It's with careful, measured tones, then, that you tell Midori about Iori being here, and...well, what could happen if the idol recognized her. She did see in the webcast that the idol's voicing Murder Mayumi, right? If they're going to stop over, then it may be prudent for her to keep a low profile.

"Ah. I...I see, sempai."

There's silence on the other end. Uneasy, uncomfortable silence, a silence that you couldn't help but try and fill. It's not that you don't want the both of them to meet or even...well, just hash things out, but this isn't the time nor the place for it. You'll be there for her when that has to happen, but not now.

"N-no, sempai, it's alright." Midori's voice catches slightly as she reassures you. "I...I know what I did, nothing's going to change that. And...and yes, I know what could happen if she recognized me. I'm not really sure myself if she got a clear look at me or not, anyway. Things kind of get blurry around the time you shot my legs off." A giggle, here, that even you could spot as forced. "But sure, sempai. I'll make sure I'm out of sight."

You thank her for being patient with you. She knows you're hardly the type to care about this sort of thing, unless it was really important.

"I know, sempai, and you don't have to apologize, or anything. I'll be fine." The smile in her voice isn't so forced, now. "Thank you for telling me in advance."

[+2 Midori Points!]

Right. That's all you wanted to tell her.

"Alright, sempai. Kyoko-san says we'll be stopping by in the evening. ...Ah, she wants to say goodbye."

More shuffling, and Kyoko's voice comes on once more. "Yo, Murderface! I forgot, I wanted to talk to you about somethin'!"

What is it?

"Ah, huh...well, it can probably wait and stuff. You're busy and shit, an' I don't want to shovel more onto your plate. ...No, it's nothing serious, but I thought you'd want to know, seeing as I'm your aide and everything."

...She's pregnant?

"Hah! No! Jeez, Murderface, you nearly made me run over an old guy! It's nothing, just something about work! Anyway, see you later, an' thanks for watchin' over Sayaka!"

No problem. Although really, it's the other way around.

"Don't let her hear you say that! Laters!"

[+50 Kyoko Points!]

You bid her goodbye, and the line goes dead. You shove your smartphone back into your inventory - just in time to catch the gleam of a sunbeam reflecting off a polished combat blade. One headed right for your kidneys.

How do you react?

No, you're not at all trained for melee combat, but you've always been surprised about your...talent for it. You're no innate master, that's for sure, your moves aren't as refined or as practiced as that of even the lowest-ranking Eversor - but despite the lack of finesse and technique, you seem to have developed a natural, almost reflexive instinct to cause pain in the most brutal ways possible. Even without a gun in your hands.

Turning on your heel - holding your right arm out - you spin around to smash your shield into the incoming blade. Instead of feeling the point of the blade add another jagged scar into the already ruined face of your shield, you instead grit your teeth against the impact of the metal plate's edge dislodging the weapon from the hand that gripped it. Hearing a surprised cry of pain as the brief resistance that met your Shield yielded, then vanished a moment later.

You catch a glimpse of a well-sized combat blade spinning end over end somewhere down into the bleachers as you immediately lunge forward, giving your attacker absolutely no time to react. Stepping right into his combat radius, you jam a foot behind their ankle and shove him into a backwards fall with his own fucking face. Putting your entire weight into the shove, your fingers curling around his skull as you follow him down.

Your assailant all but gets slammed right into the concrete, making the satisfying noise of wind being forced right out of their lungs and then some. Throwing a leg over them in a top-control straddle, the golden Desert Eagle gleams in your hand as you press its mouth onto the poor bastard's forehead in a soft, almost gentle kiss.

The entire encounter took no longer than three heartbeats. You know this, because you heard your attacker's own heart thudding in your ears, adrenalin-fast, quickened by danger. It would have taken you another to pull the trigger, and whoever had the audacity to attack you during a scopeout would need to be carted away covered in newspapers. No open-casket burial.

Until, of course, you hear a familiar voice, panicked and desperate, underneath you.

"A-alright, ma'am! I yield, I yield! You got me! I surrender! I give!"

...Kyosuke...?

You blink away the red haze in your vision, your brow furrowing as you look down at your would-be assailant - and victim.

Huh. It is Kyosuke. Gasping for breath underneath you, the young man looking up at the Desert Eagle's massive barrel. To his credit, he doesn't look all that scared - although he's sweating quite a bit, and all the color's drained from his face.

Huh? What...did he sneak up on you? Did a non-magical girl mook just very nearly got the fucking drop on you?

Something flapping at your field of vision catches your eye. You glance toward it - it's somebody's black suit, its sleeves flapping in the air. You look back down towards the young man you're currently pinning to the ground - and notice that he's now clad in only a singlet, with a shoulder holster and a bandolier of magazines worn over it. An empty combat knife sheathe strapped to his side.

"I...uh. Ma'am, please, I know you're angry, but...m-may I please ask if you could take your trigger finger away from the huge gun about to blow my head clean off? At..at least until I can explain everything, ma'am." Kyosuke tries again, managing to force a guilty smile.

...No, you're not amused. You're not amused at all.

How do you react?

Yeah, no. You keep the Desert Eagle on him as you keep him pinned there. He pulled the knife on you, so no favors. He's lucky you're in the mood to be reasonable, despite everything that's happened so far. Either he explains why he just tried to knife you in the kidneys, or you explain to Sayaka that she'll have to conduct their timely reunion with him in the morgue.

"R-right. That's...that's fair, Miss Matsuda." Kyosuke swallows audibly, eyes darting nervously from you, to the gun, then back at you again. "M-Miss Matsuda, I'm...I'm team leader of my squad. We're...well, we're not magical. We don't have any sparkles."

Of course. Even you can tell that. But what does that have to do with anything?

"It's got...it's got everything to do with everything, Miss MatsudaNOPLEASEDON'TSHOOTPLEASEDON'TSHOOT," Kyosuke's words start to run together at the end when you pulled back the trigger the tiniest fraction of a millimeter more. You don't like it when the people you're interrogating try to be smart with you. "We're...it's sort of a tradition, Miss Matsuda! The team leader of any op has to get a souvenir f-from any Magical Girl working with us! That's all it was, Miss Matsuda, and that's the honest truth!"

A...souvenir? You narrow your eyes at him, and prod him a bit more with your Desert Eagle. What's this stupid (and obviously suicidal) tradition for? What kind of souvenir do they have to take from the presiding Magical Girl? And if he wanted something like that, couldn't he have just asked you for it, whatever it was?

"J-just a scrap of cloth from your uniform, Miss Matsuda! Nothing else!" Kyosuke shakes his head furiously. "I was...I was trying to go for one of the tails in your back ribbon, I didn't think you'd miss it! A-and it's part of the tradition, to take it with a knife, a-and without the Magical Girl knowing!" It's here he absolutely looks wretched. "And...o-of course I know it's a stupid tradition, Miss Matsuda, but...but that sort of ruins the point, doesn't it? If we ask for it, then what's...what's the point?" He swallows again, unable to take his eyes away from the Desert Eagle's barrel pressed against his forehead. "It's...I suppose you can say it's a game for us, Miss Matsuda. One where we can at least feel that we're proving to ourselves that we're...we're not obsolete, as such."

...Obsolete?

Kyosuke nods. "It's...we're one of the few security agencies left, Miss Matsuda. I don't mind it much, b-but...well, ever since the Magical Girls came in, we've been getting less and less work. Principals nowadays can't seem to sleep right without a Magical Girl signed onto their detail, not like the days when they'd be satisfied with a well-armed squad or two." Despite himself, he lets out a sigh. "It's...well, it's just our way of coping, ma'am. Yes, I know it was uncalled for and unprofessional, but the team needed a morale boost after...after what happened back at the hotel." Another sigh. "And these guys are family men, Miss Matsuda. They feed their families through this work. They don't mean any harm, they just need a bit of a morale boost."

Huh. That's...you suppose that makes sense. In a stupid sort of way.

...Wait. So, if this is the first time he'd seen a Magical Girl, then...?

He tries to shrug, but with his arms pinned to his sides by your own legs, all he manages is a brief twitch of his shoulders. "It sucks trying to sneak up on a Magical Girl."

On an entirely unrelated note.

Kyoko and Midori are searching for a missing girl. A missing girl who disappeared off the face of the Earth. Kinda like how a certain Rika "cosplayer" had no form of ID or any connection to anyone.
Clearly they are related, and clearly they are coming because the two missions are related and Decu realized we are too dumb to notice that.

What about more heavily armed or specialist security firms, ones that are closer to being PMC's and so have better trained and combat-hardened personnel? Yes, it's reassuring to get lolraeped by your opponent. No need to make decisions, since no matter what you do, you're fucked.

Yes yes, 'tis a jest. But if there is anyone who can piss off the Incubators enough to get these girls to appear, it's us.

Time Stop works by stopping time with magic, yes? Then if someone were to have an anti-magic field, then they would be unaffected by the time stop, allowing them to move within a Time Stopped world. This would effectively make them like Kirika, whose own time manipulation powers allowed her to move and act in spite of our Time Stop.

We really need to see if we can pull that ribbons to rifles bullshit like Mami.

We could really use some other non-pinky attracting/gifted powers.

Thats not how it works. Its not the the whole world stops because Homu`s Timestop. its just that Homu leaves the timestream. This is also why you have to touch her so her Ability effects you too.

In the MGN setting you can "counter" it by:

Having a 2Fast2Furious ability like you said
Being a culexus like >>25911451 said
Having a time based ability like Kirika did.

All of them are only possible ofcourse for magical girls, there is no way a normal human can counter the ultimate timestop ability Homu has, even if it is a Anti-Meduca PMC.

I'm wondering why the Incubators haven't already wiped them out. When a third side has something to threaten your operatives, it's sort of..concerning.

For example, there's the Third Incubator that decided to cash out of the Meguca industry and no longer be held accountable to the energy quotas from Home Office, so he could concentrate on pure profiteering. What's to say that he hasn't gotten into the magical weapons industry with Incubator tech?

Or the Tenth, who uses unsavory tactics that are supposed to be taboo among the Incubators.

Just because 'normal humans' can't do something, doesn't mean that such 'normal humans' can't buy the tech to do the said thing (anti-magic fields) from an Incubator that's more concerned about profit or destabilizing a rival Officio.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You are a Magical Girl, and you're seriously considering shooting the young man you're currently on top of. Just a flesh wound somewhere unimportant, like on a leg, or maybe on an arm. Something that'd heal up quick enough even without the application of magic to cure it.

It's nothing personal, of course. Nothing personal at all. The fact that you're more than a bit pissed at someone outside of your work actually managed to sneak up and you and get into knife range doesn't factor into it at all. Or how today's succession of events had continuously worn down your patience into a tissue-thin veneer of not shooting people in the kneecaps the moment they so much as look at you wrong.

No, nothing professional. Just work, after all.

It's strange, though. You wouldn't have spent more than a split second thinking about it, back then. You wouldn't even think about justifying it, or mentally going over how it'd affect the op as it proceeded.

This is how it begins, you sigh mournfully to yourself. This is how you become a stalwart crusader against all things fun. This is how you become normal and dependable. This is how you become Sayaka.

Someday, you'll be able to hate Mami for pushing for your promotion.

Probably around the same time when you're able to wake up remembering just what the hell you did to piss off a world-eating eldritchian horror so badly she gets murder-erections whenever you visit her.

It's with another sigh, then, that you slip the Golden Desert Eagle back into its holster, underneath your jacket and concealed from view. You get up off of Kyosuke a moment later, and help him up back to his feet by his tie. He managed to thank you a moment after getting the ability to breathe again.

As the both of you begin to make yourselves a bit more presentable in strange, awkward silence - strangely reminiscient ofa couple putting their clothes back on after a rough rendezvous in some shrubbery - it's here that you ask the young man about this tradition of theirs. Seeing as it's obviously a dangerous game to play - trying to sneak up on a magical girl just to steal a scrap of her costume - did anyone from his agency ever manage to succeed?

"Only a few, Miss Matsuda. It's a rare enough occurence that whoever manages to do it gets a huge bonus and a pay raise, not to mention better equipment." The young man explains as he shrugs his coat back on.

Really? Well, you can understand his enthusiasm at least. Who's the last guy to manage it, and who was the unfortunate Magical Girl that got to be the patsy?

>>26006914

"Allow me to verify that for you, Miss Matsuda." The young man presses a finger into his ear, and you switch on your own headset at his gesture. "HQ? HQ, help me verify something, is that alright?"

You hear what seems to be a female voice come over the shared frequency. "Go ahead, prettyboy. What's eating you?"

"Thank you, HQ." Kyosuke winces a bit at the nickname, seemingly embarassed, but ploughs on. "Who's the last person to win the Sparkles Award?"

"That thing?" A sigh. "You guys and your stupid contests. Gimme a moment." A shuffling of paper. "Here we go - ah, figured. It's the Big Boss who just retired a year ago. Ol' Jack, someone before your time, prettyboy. Says here he barely managed to get a bead from the Sixth Warmaster's necklace, something like that."

The Warmaster of the Sixth? How'd he manage that?

The woman at the other end of the line takes a moment to reply, and you realize a moment too late that you spoke out loud."...And I wasn't aware another sparklebitch is in on the conversation, Prettyboy. I should've known." A chuckle. "Fine, whatever. Apparently he managed it after the both of them hunted each other in a jungle, or something. Got it after he caught her sleeping off a meal. Managed to escape juuuust barely." Another chuckle. "That should be enough to quench Miss Sparkle's curiosity, right?"

Kyosuke hastily replies before you could respond. "That's fine, HQ. Thanks. ...Prettyboy out." There's another cackle as the party at the other end switches off, and he looks at you guiltily. "Er. Sorry about that, Miss Matsuda. Some of my colleagues don't really appreciate what Magical Girls are doing."

You wave his apology away. Nothing for him to apologize for. At least you know that it's not some kind of mind trick, or something.

"Well, allow me to apologize again for what I tried, Miss Matsuda." He bows to you again, contrite. "I was really hoping I'd get it, but I'm obviously out of my league, here." Kyosuke laughs, rather lamely. "Thank you for not shooting my legs off." The young man adds after a moment.

Nothing to thank you for, either. It's your damn professionalism in the way.

...But if he still wants that pay raise, though...you may have an idea about that. An idea about a year or so in the making. Brewing ever since someone set you on fire as a distraction.

"...What idea, Miss Matsuda?"

You'll tell him on the way back to the stage, you tell him. Hiding a small smile as you reach up to adjust your glasses.

The both of you manage to return to the stage without any further hassle. The practice session seems to have wrapped up, and some of the idols are already back into their civilian clothing, going off on their seperate ways, each one bidding Ruri goodbye in turn. It's almost a formal affair, the idols lining up to bow in front of a smiling Ruri, the super idol sitting regally in a ordinary white plastic chair. The chair could've been a throne in how she sat in it, while a rather forlorn Deepthroat aimed a small hand fan at her, cooling her while she sipped a large iced coffee.

"Hey, Murderface!" Sayaka bids a few idols she'd been chatting with goodbye - and you supress the reflex of drawing your gun and shooting the strange, surreal apparition walking towards you. The unreal, impossible abomination all but running towards you.

Sayaka's smiling. Holy fuck, she's actually smiling.

"The hell were you? You missed us just KILLING the entire dance number! And it's really awesome, you should've seen it--" It's then that the Blueberry stops right in her tracks, her usual scowl slammming down hard on her cheerful smile. Eradicating every trace of it existing. "...What the fuck are you looking at?" She snaps, and you almost sigh in relief at this. Now this Sayaka, you know--

...Oh. Wait. She was looking at Kyosuke when she said it. The young man had walked behind you on the way here, and was now holding up his hands in surrender, his face pale. "You'd better turn around and get the cars ready for our trip back to the Hotel or I'll gut your shit!"

"R-Right away, ma'am!" Kyosuke manages to nod at you, before all but hastily booking it out of view. Speaking frantically into his headset's mic all the way. ...Christ, he actually sounds scared. You lower the volume until it's barely a decipherable volume, and turn towards Sayaka.

"...What?" Sayaka blinks at you, puzzled, before frowning again. "Just...just trying to get those goons to pick up the pace, that's all!"

Right. Just that.

Behind her, you see Iori, also talking to a few idols in a distracted sort of way. Sneaking glances your way, as if wanting to talk to you about something.

You raise an eyebrow at the Eversor. She doesn't need to go nuclear on the help. And you were just scoping out the place for sniping spots, just in case.

Sayaka narrows her eyes at you for a moment. "...Hello? Earth to Murderface! Since when did you give a shit about the help? That's all they are!" It's here that Sayaka's voice goes up a few notches on the volume scale, evidently trying to have Kyosuke - and the other guards - hear her. "They're just the help! Bunch of thick-necked muscleheads who can't even guard a cake from a cake-hungry fatty! If they could do their goddamn jobs right we wouldn't need to even be here in the first place!"

Of course, the idols also heard her little rant, and as you look around, you notice that they've stopped chattering, looking at Sayaka with a myriad of reactions - some intimidated, some outright afraid, and in the case of the red-haired S idol that Deepthroat pointed out to you earlier, frank admiration. Even Ruri is sporting a rather amused smile at this.

The security detail are probably the only ones that aren't really that amused, stiffly standing to attention. You spot a few sneaking glances at Sayaka, their lips curling into frowns.

Well, anyway. It looks like she had fun with the practice, though.

"Huh? Oh. Oh, yeah. It was great! Er, I mean..." Sayaka's smile turns up again, before her eyes widen and her cheeks flush red. As if...uncomfortable to appear human and unbitchlike to you. "It was...alright. Not that much of a pain, although the routines can get pretty boring the twentieth time you gotta run them through. Okay as a light exercise, though. I didn't even break a sweat!" She grins at this, and you see a few idols turn away at this, obviously dismayed. You note that the idols doing so are a bit flushed and sweaty, having not yet changed out of their costumes. Probably too tired to do so at the moment.

"I hate to admit it, but she's right," Ruri chimes in from behind Sayaka, the super idol throwing one arm around the Eversor's waist. Deepthroat orbiting her still, keeping the small, pathetic hand fan aimed. "Seriously, she danced circles around us! I think even Makoto-chan would've passed out if all of us tried to keep up with her pace!" Sayaka manages an embarrassed smile at this. "Seriously, Sayaka-chan, dial it back a bit! You're making the rest of us look bad, and we do this for a living!"

"Haah, uh, sorry about that, Ruri-chan..." The blue Eversor starts to turn red, giggling awkwardly. GIGGLING. That's twice she'd blown your mind today.

"Don't mind, don't mind!" Ruri cheers. "Just so long as you'll give my offer serious consideration! We'd love to have you on board as an idol, you know! In fact..." The super idol looks Sayaka up and down. "I'll be surprised if you say that you haven't done this before! You should have had, or else I'll have to acknowledge that you've got more natural talent at this than me!"

"A-ah, ahaha, that's too much, Ruri-chan..." Sayaka is clearly embarrassed, here, yet loving it just as much. "Honestly, this is my first time..."

One of the very early thread options involved Chiaki grumbling to Kyouko about setting her on fire.

The option was not chosen, but it seems to be a background event that happened and was just never detailed.

It's been brought up again recently because of Kyouko going on a mission of her own with Midori and people being afraid that she'll set Midori on fire instead.

You turn towards Ruri. She's not trying to steal Sayaka away, isn't she? Because that would be all sorts of bad - not to mention that your boss isn't into employees moonlighting. He's very strict about that kind of thing.

"Well, even just as a part-time thing, if it's really too much to have her with us as a full-time idol!" Ruri grins at you. "And I'm sure your wouldn't mind - he's the business-minded sort, isn't he? A few mutually-profitable deals here and there'd soften the blow of having Sayaka-chan here work for us a bit." The super idol giggles here again, before rubbing cheeks with the Eversor and flashing a peace sign. "Noriko-chan, photo op!"

"Got it, Ruri-sama," Deepthroat says hollowly, holding up an...expensive-looking DSLR with an equally expensive-looking lens. Where the hell did she pull that out?!

"Thankies~!" The super idol winks at you, before finally letting go of the blushing Blueberry. "Anyway, I need to get out of these sweaty clothes and take a shower! Sayaka-chan, you can join me if you want, alright?" There's a slapping noise, and Sayaka jumps forward with a squeal, both hands grabbing her rear, cheeks crimsoning all the more. Ruri giggles again, before finally walking off towards what looks to be a changing room built specifically for her. Some of the goons standing on either side of its entrance, hands behind them and facing forward.

The both of you stare at Ruri's back as she all but sashays her way to her exclusive changing room. Your eyes inadvertently being drawn down to her...well, down to that area. Finding yourself comparing it to another one that you've had previous experience with.

...You shake your head, and glance back at Sayaka, who's still doing the staring.

Wasn't she eager to go home, earlier? Something about her perception of the idol being totally ruined?

"...W-well, that...that was just first impressions, that sort of thing," Blueberry stammers, managing to tear her eyes away from Ruri. "Spending time with her now, she's not all that bad. I...kinda thought she was just a spoiled rich brat, to be honest. Now..." She shrugs. "Eh, I'm trying hard not to think too much about it. But she's pretty nice, you know?

Hnh. Well, you're glad she isn't planning on bailing out on the op anytime soon. But she should at least try not to let it get in the way of work.

"...Hah. You, lecturing me about that?" She grins at you, a shade of the previous Sayaka returning. "Fuck you, Murderface."

You return the grin with a halfhearted smile of your own. Attagirl.

It's here that Deepthroat seems to materialize behind Sayaka, tugging at her sleeve. You see the Eversor pull back on the stabbing reflex to turn towards the short idol, forcing a friendly smile onto her face. "Y-yes? What is it, Noriko?"

"M-Miss Ruri is already in the bath and waiting for you, Miss Sayaka," Noriko murmurs. "S-she says you should join her right now, before the rose petals sink."

"...Please tell Ruri-chan I'll be right with her," The Eversor replies, and Noriko stumbles off. Sayaka turns back to you. "Well. Uh. Let's...keep this between the both of us, eh, Murderface?"

Sure. No problem. ...Oh, Kyoko's coming over with Midori later. Is there anything Sayaka might want for her to bring along besides the stuff she asked for?

"Huh? Oh..." Sayaka thinks. "Nah, nothing, really. Already told her what I need, shouldn't be anything more than that." She nods at you, before heading off towards the changing room. "Just...keep an eye out, okay?"

Yeah. Sure.

You look around as Sayaka leaves the scene. Some of the idols are still hanging around, some waiting for their rides home, others...well, just looking at you while talking amongst themselves. Iori seems to have her back turned to you, her phone held up to her ear.

It's here that you feel your own smartphone vibrating in regular intervals. Telling you that someone's calling. You pull it out of your inventory - and blink at the screen.

The call is from Iori, and she's waiting for you to answer. You glance at her again, and she nods at you briefly before turning away once more.

What do you do?

Although it is worth mentioning that Yuu said that her memory wasn't so great after being transferred to the gauntlets. It could possibly be unreliable information.

>I love the little details, like Pinky's bloodied claws. What other characters are planned?

For now, Souji and Misaka. After that, the rest of the PMMM cast. Will round out the Ninth Officio with Kumatara and Yuma.

I was also asked very nicely to include Wendy Cooldown in the height chart, so she she's planned. Might take a while to get around to her, but I already did a practice run trying to translate the costume concept that deculture outlined into my style.

IORI MINASE

Taking a cue from the idol, you turn away from her, walking a few steps to increase the distance between the both of you. Opening the conversation between the both of you with an offer she can't possibly refuse.

"W-what? A hairdryer? I..." Iori is clearly caught off-guard by this, and you see her shake her head furiously from the corner of your vision. "N-no, Chiaki-san, nothing of the sort! That's...that's honestly dreadful!" A moment of silence. "Have...have you done that before, Chiaki-san? Kill somebody that way?"

...Probably? You've got an unreliable memory, remember? There's a good chance of it, any case.

"I...I see. Um..." Another awkward silence. "A-anyway! I wanted to talk to Chiaki-san. I mean, um, after what happened the last time we....we talked. But before that, I...I'm sorry for talking to you like this." You could hear the sad smile in her voice. "I...I just don't want the others from looking at you the way they did back then."

That's...that's considerate of her, but she didn't need to go to such lengths. You hardly care what a couple of idols think of you.

"A-ah." Off-guard once more, Iori falls silent. "But...but Kyuubey wouldn't appreciate losing potential clients too, would he?"

...Well, she's got a point there. But you hardly care what the mutant cat thinks of you, either.

"I...I see. W-well, um...anyway. Back at the coffee shop--"

Yes. Back at the coffee shop. What about it?

"...Yes. I...I'm sorry for making a scene, back then, Chiaki-san. And I wanted to say that I meant every word of what I said. I..." Iori pauses here, her breath catching. "I'd like to at least be your friend I realize that I've....come on too strong, and I may have expected too much, too fast. I apologize for everything, Chiaki-san."

Huh. Well. That's...you weren't expecting this at all.

It's a strange feeling, having someone else care about you so much. You doubt you'll be able to get used to it.

How do you respond?

Feel the need to make a little comment here. I do run the details by decu before I start drawing to make sure that it's close to how he imagines the height differences.

Counting Midori as 9th Officio, she's taller than the rest, except for Sayaka who's the same height as her.

Technically their relationship was worse at first, with them trying to kill one another, but they've warmed up just a bit to the level of "jerky rivals". At the moment, Sayaka seems too happy with the whole idol thing to be too grumpy for once, though.

It also helps that Kyousuke is currently acting as a lightning rod for her hate.

Not quite that far, no.
We started off maybe a little worse than canon, due to our first meeting involving us shooting QB and getting the splatter all over her face.
Recently we've been trying to patch stuff up, at first simply to be a better person, and more recently because we wanted Kyoko as our Aide and she wanted Sayaka to come along as part of a package deal.
We still spend free time looking for reasons to murder each other, but most of the time we're at least professional. Sometimes even cordial!

You turn towards Iori - and you find yourself staring back at Iori, the idol looking back at you hopefully and warily at the same time. As if optimistic and at the same time afraid of how you'll respond, how you'll react to everything. ...She probably saw how bad of a mood you've been having lately, so she can't really be blamed for it, now can she?

"...Chiaki-san?" You hear her voice come through the earpiece of your phone. Sounding the most timid and the most vulnerable she'd sounded ever since you'd met he. For the first time, at the penthouse suite in the Ritz.

It's with a decisive tap of your smartphone screen that you end the call - causing Iori to look back at you with equal amounts of confusion and hurt. After you start walking towards her, though, confusion seems to come to the fore, along with nervousness and a bit of fear, if her suddenly-wide eyes are anything to go by.

You could feel every other idol looking at you as you finally stop in front of Minase Iori. The idol herself is trembling a bit - her phone still held up to her ear, as if frozen there, unable to move. You try to ignore this - as well as the reflex of spitting out something rude and crass at the crowd ogling the both of you - before managing a smile of your own. Mirroring the nervous one Iori is trying to force right now.

"I can work with friends," You hear yourself say, as gently as possible with a voice ravaged by too much drinking and too much smoking. "I don't have a lot of those."

Iori could only look up at you and nod, unable to form any words. She nods again, managing to finally put her smartphone down. What she doesn't manage to do, though, is to put it away properly - the gadget clattering on the floor as she stands up suddenly, in a flurry of expensive cloth and silk, both her arms wrapping around you in an embrace. Your own arms falling slack by your sides in surprise.

You...you don't know if she's crying, but with how she's trembling against you, she may as well be. ...Great, fantastic, you made someone cry again. You're just getting a bit tired of always managing to screw shit up like this--

"N-no, thank...thank you, Chiaki-san." Iori whispers, sniffling a bit, but otherwise, sounding...okay. "That's all I wanted. That's what I needed. I..." Iori's arms slacken very slightly around you, before hugging you tight again. "I don't have a lot of friends, either."

The idol nods, a small giggle muffled into your costume. "I really like the sound of that, Chiaki-san." A moment. "U-um, I'm sorry, but...is it okay if we stay like this for a bit?"

Uh. Um. You don't really know, but--

"Miss Matsuda?" Kyosuke's voice comes over your headset, the volume automatically scaling up.

...What is it? You grumble into your mic. Bit busy, here.

"...I apologize for interrupting, but Miss Sakura and a companion of hers are here. Should we let them in, now?"

How do you react?

Pretty much all of this really happened. The parts that aren't in barriers are more or less completely true, I'm awful sure of that. My buddy Ash really did get her hand ripped off by a witch and had it replaced with a chainsaw, I shit you not. Granted, there are a few parts of it I ain't too sure about. Mostly because I was either getting smashed into unconsciousness, or stoned out of my head on drugs. Sometimes something Riggs gave me, most of the time something I got slipped. Hell, the first time it happened it came out of a bottle a' cola. From a vending machine and everything! Anyway, I'm getting all sidetracked here, I got a story to tell.

My name's Caroline Brandt. This yarn I'm gonna be spinning for y'all is about what I consider my best friends on this Earth. Some of the other girls called us Night Owls, and it stuck enough that we took it for ourselves. We're witch hunters, for the Crazy Eighth way off in Santa Destroy. Called so cause we're up all night, obviously. Most witches don't go prowling around town during the day. Most of em. No idea why, there's no fuckin' rhyme or reason to it. Some of the whimpiest hits we ever made were on what we liked to call Daywalkers. And then later on our whole squad was probably only saved more than once from getting put down for good by sunrise when some of the really terrible things runnin' around out there come callin'.

Maybe they just can't stand the light cause it lets em' see just how fuckin' ugly they've got. Anyway, sidetracked again

This story's kinda long. It's not particularly happy either, and the end left me with one hell of a bittersweet taste in my mouth, let me tell ya'. But I think it ought to be told. I'm writin' this for a reason. And the fact that only several thousand little girls are probably going to be the only people able to read it without thinkin' it's nothin' but a load of horseshit, or just some fantastical fiction story ain't gonna stop me. Someone's gotta know what happened. Shit I need to do this even if I never actually show anyone. Just gotta write it down somewhere. Think I might just lose my mind if I don't get some of this shit out of my head. Everything about that stinking bitch Tower, with Evie, the witch cults. With the Sleeper, especially, but she comes later. Much later.

Bit scary when I think that this whole thing took maybe a month. And to this day I've been doin' the Eighth's work for maybe three months as I'm writing this. I guess it all started just after I got that dossier with my first real mission in it. For me and Ana too. Her whole name's Anastasia Krylova, but she says Anastasia's too damn fancy for her likin' so she just wants everyone to call her Ana. If you want to piss her off call her Stacy though, she hates that.

The two of us were sittin' around in the cafeteria, and I hadn't yet cracked the thing open to read. Nobody's supposed to start fights in the chow hall, cause it's a bitch to get cleaned up again because every time it ends up some insane sort of combination lethal bar brawl/food fight.

It still fuckin' happens all the time though. Most of the smarter girls went down the street to Burger Suplex or somethin' to avoid the carnage, but Ana and I like to flirt with disaster, so we'd hang around and wait for a fight to start and talk about bullshit while we waited. At least she'd try to, and I'd get argumentative or somethin'. I wasn't exactly the friendliest gal in the Officio then. Still pretty bitter about a lot of stuff that I'll get to real soon, I reckon.

The two of us were in our costumes for now. I remember not being too happy with mine when I first saw what I looked like in it, but that died when I saw some of the other girls in theirs. Christ, some of em' probably got more showin' in those things than they got covered up! The upside was the brown duster that came with the thing, kinda made me look like some old west gunslinger. Well, as long as you were lookin' at me from the back. From the front you could see my bellybutton and everything and I just felt kinda fuckin' silly. Too damn cold some mornings too. And before you start sayin' that Cali ain't that cold, how about to you come to where I'm from. I was born in 'nawlins, and raised in a fuckin' swamp before we moved to this nuthouse a year ago. So you just smile and nod while I bitch about how cold your shitty state is in the morning, and I don't call you a fuckin' weenie when you whine about the heat bein' so oppressive it literally tries to grind you into the sidewalk. But back to the story.

Ana leaned over the table, in backless and frilly white dress and asked me somethin' as casually as she could with that subtle little Russian accent of hers.

“So how many of our colleagues wished for a dick, do you think?”

I remember half choking on my food there. I'd been pretty content to reply with monosyllabic grunts to her dumb questions before that one caught me way off guard. I still wonder if she was actually serious about that one, or just wondering if I was listening to anything she was saying. Never can be too sure with her.

“What kinda sick pervert would wish for somethin' like that. Why?”

She just shrugged at me, smiling. Ana knew she'd gotten to me with that one. “Some people are into that sort of shit, Carol.”

I shook my head, pushing my food to the side and narrowing my eyes at the black haired Vindicare in front of me. “How fuckin' many. How are you supposed to pick someone up as a girl with a fuckin' cock. They'd wanna know beforehand, so you gotta tell em first. What the fuck are you supposed t' say? Ey bitch! Wanna have a nice dance around my pole!”

I feel it's also worth mentioning I also didn't have much of an inside voice back then. So I probably managed to draw a few real weird looks with that remark. And if Ana's right, might've gotten a few all hot and bothered. The latter's what really worries me.

Ana coughed to keep herself from giggling, trying to get a word in over my rant. “I really do not think you would need to just say...”

“No, that ain't the biggest problem!” I shot back, in full swing. “If you're into chicks, why are you looking to get a cock? Dykes ain't into cocks, that's why they're dykes. Even people swinging both ways would be pretty fuckin' weirded out by that kinda' shit, Ana!”

I think I could have gone on like that for a pretty long time, if someone comin' up behind me hadn't gone and jerked my chair away from the table.

My rant interrupted, I glared up at whoever'd gone and wrecked my train on thought while I was on a roll. Sneering down at me were the lovely faces of Kheda and Prina Firecracker. I think they're Chechens, since I called them Russians once and Ana got pretty fucking pissed off and made it clear they weren't. The Eighth grabbed em' from the scores of orphans the local mob left behind since we were perpetually short of warm bodies for a variety of reasons. They too were witchhunters, a sister Eversor/Vindicare team. Well, they weren't actually sisters, but I guess they were close enough they may as well have been, and got awfully goddamn mad if someone told them otherwise.

“Hello Carrot! You're buying our lunch today!” grinned Kheda, rattling my chair around. “Yeah, five for both of us should do, and not a penny under, Carrot.”

I think it's also worth noting that I fucking loathe that nickname, Carrot. My hair is fucking red, not orange goddamnit. There are only about three people in the world I'll tolerate callin' me that. And if you read this and decide to call me that too, I'll shoot ya' right in the box.

“Look Tweedledee and Tweedledum, I ain't in the mood for your horseshit right now. So scram, I'm trying to talk about ladycock with Ana here, ain't that right?” I looked over to the Eversor, who nodded. I thought it was funny that she seemed even less happy to see those two than I did.

“I don't think she's taking us seriously, Sister! We're pretty dangerous, aren't we?” Kheda said to her not-sister.

“You should show them how dangerous we are!” agreed Prina, rattling my chair around again.

It was Ana's expression that tipped me off first. The look of loathing slid right off her face and turned into this shocked stare. I looked back up again, just about the same time I heard the sound of a gun being drawn. Now I was about a split second from going for a rooty-tooty point and shooty of my own when I saw it wasn't me that Kheda was gunning for. Instead she placed the barrel of the .45 she just drew against her temple and blew a good chunk of her skull all over the fucking table.

I'm pretty fucking glad none of it landed on me, since I was open mouthed in shock at what just happened and I really didn't want to find out what Kheda's brainmeats tasted like. A lot of it ended up on my food. The rest pasted some poor girl sitting just next to Ana. I don't think the poor kid realized what she'd been hit with at first since she was faced the other way talking with her friend.

So as I watch in amazement as Kheda is only rocked in place from popping her own skull with a handgun, she turns around and hits Ana right in the face with her mashed potato volcano, who was also staring in slack jawed horror at what just happened. For a few seconds, all I could hear was a numb-tongued gurgling out of the wounded Russian, then the cracking of bone as her head started to put itself back together, just growing in new bone and brain and skin and everything right there. And to top it all off, after a few snorts and coughs, that bitch spat out a bloody chunk of bullet right there in front of me.

I stared back up at that grinning bitch as the poor kid with the greymatter facepaint started to realize exactly what she was wearing and was starting to panic a little. “I will pay you both ten each if you never fuckin' do that again. Ever.” I breathed, still stunned, and dragged a fresh Jackson out of my coat. Prina snatched it from my hand and let go of the chair. The both of them fucked right off as things suddenly started to heat up inside the mess. I could hear a couple more gunshots of all sorts of calibur, axes, swords, spears, and every other kind of cold steel killing implement under the sun being drawn, as the food began to fly.

Yeah, shit gets fucked up pretty quick around there. It was a short fight, but a good one, I guess. Only a couple of us ended up killed, but it's hard to keep us down. That's the good side of all this Magical Girl shit, when you want to cut loose while spirits are high, you can really cut loose on each other and not worry much about it. I think the highlight was some kid that couldn't have been older than twelve doing some kinda kung-fu action movie acrobatics shit through the air and snatching that twenty right out of Prina's hand before flipping right into the crowd and fucking off for good. Other than that, not much worth mentioning. Ana still hates mashed potatoes to this day. Eightball got real pissed again about the mess getting trashed, which didn't stop another fight from happening the very next day.

A little bit later we'd got the food and blood washed off, and I'd wiped all the brains off the dossier's folder, something occurred to me about how hard to kill we are sometimes. How it's cause we're pretty much just a corpse if our pretty little Soul Gems get a bit too far from the rest of us. I thought it was funny that I'd never felt this fucking alive until I was dead. And even after all the shit I've yet to tell you about, I still don't regret signing off my soul in the slightest.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You tell Kyosuke to have the two guests escorted to the stadium entrance - you'll be receiving them personally.

"Right away, Miss Matsuda." Kyosuke replies, all business. It seems he's recovered from earlier, at least. You remind him about what you talked about, earlier.

"...Of course, Miss Matsuda. I suppose it's a good thing I haven't eaten anything since lunch earlier." The young man lets out a weak, nervous laugh. "Hopefully she doesn't set me on fire like last time."

...What? She set him on fire too? What is with Kyoko and fire? Is she some sort of closet pyromaniac, or something?

>> ☐ Deculture 07/15/13(Mon)07:56 No.26025794

"Your guess is as good as mine, Miss Matsuda. Any case, I'm on my way."

There's a tell-tale click as Kyosuke signs off, and you turn back to Iori, who's still...well, she hasn't stopped hugging you, really. A guilty flush reddening her cheeks, she slowly disengages from you, stepping back and clasping her hands behind her.

"Back to work, then, Chiaki-san?" The idol asks, a disappointed note in her voice. You nod at this, trying not to look as disappointed as her. ...Getting hugged was pretty nice, if you'll be allowed to be honest with yourself. And thankfully, you weren't wearing the hat at the time.

You glance back at the changing room that Sayaka's gone off to with Ruri. Hopefully, the superidol's keeping her hands to herself, otherwise you'll have to write this up as a failed mission on account of Principal Client Kill. No, you still can't stand Sayaka, and Kyoko can be grating even on her best days, but you won't forgive yourself for just standing idly by while a chirping little waif tore their relationship apart.

You've accepted that you're a terrible person, but you'd like to pretend that even something like that is beneath you.

It's here that you tell Iori that you'll be back momentarily. Just meeting Kyoko for some stuff Sayaka asked her to bring along.

"Ah, Kyoko-san, is it?" Iori smiles at this, clasping both hands together in front of her. "I haven't seen her for a while! May I come along, Chiaki-san? I'd like to at least greet her in person. She was very nice to me for our first meeting, and I consider her a friend."

How do you deal with this?

WHY DIDN'T YOU STOP IT?

Hey guys.

>"But Iori-chan...she was really into you, Chiaki-chan. Almost unhealthily so. I...I guess I wanted to help her dial it back a bit." She turns back towards you. "So I did it the only way I knew how."

>By...being a massive superbitch?

>"Ding ding ding! Tell the audience what we've got for Chiaki-chan, Johnny!" Ruri does a little hop and skip, clapping her hands, her long twintails bobbing up and down. "You got it in one! And no, I don't mind if she hated me in the bargain, as long as she realizes how bad an idea it is to fall in love with a Magical Girl." It's here that her smile fades, somewhat. "It's the worst thing an idol can do, and one she may not live long enough to regret."

Who said that Ruri's 'helpful' lesson is over?
Perhaps Ruri's is going to deliberately turn Sayaka into a witch, by mesmerising her and NTR'ing kyoko and undoing the control when Kyoko's all like "We are through!"

And the best part?
The only reason why Sayaka is here is because we didn't go along with rigged competition.

~~It will be all out fault~~

If Midori still feels so guilty about it that she feels the need to jeopardize our mission and possibly traumatize someone in order to relieve some of that guilt, then it is clearly unhealthy for her to bear it as things are.

In other words, I trust Midori to not do it unless she absolutely must.

I can only speak for myself. Letting her tag along because the two are going to meet eventually and I'd rather it happens now when we're there to run damage control rather than at a moment when they're alone.

Apologizing is optional. As another anon said, if Midori feels so guilty that she'll try to apologize despite repeated warnings, she deserves a chance to try and clear her conscience.

Midori has, so far, been characterized as a nice girl who got pushed into some extreme circumstances due to chance.

Personally, I'd like to giver her the chance to make amends. It might result in some drama in the immediate future but it'll be better than being found out in the long run under uncontrolled factors.

Holy living shit, I actually made it to an MGNQ thread.

Now I can finally ask whether or not I'm the only one that realized ~~that Sabrina from the 8th is Sabitsuki from .flow -- she's got the "Sab" in her name, uses a metal pipe, and has rusting powers ("rust" is the first kanji in Sabitsuki's name.~~

...I also wanted to ask why and how in hell nobody realized that the dead skier in the Siberia arc was a SkiFree reference, but that's long past us now.

>You turn to look - and it's there that you see what looks like the skeletal remains of a skier impaled on a tree branch, his bright neon clothing now faded and dulled with drying blood. A broken jawbone hangs lopsidely from underneath a crimson skiing cap, as petrified fingers clasp around the jagged stump of a branch jutting out of the former skier's ribcage.

>It's to note that it is missing both its legs, and most of its lower torso.

>"One of the victims from last month." Kharn murmurs under her breath as she nudges you to continue walking. "We suspect he was a tourist who flew in here by helicopter, looking for fresh skiing spots. See how he is holding onto that which holds him in place, on the tree? The bears placed him there while he was still alive, and it was then that they started feasting on him."

...yes, because there are so MANY skiers in hideously colored outfits that are famous for getting eaten by bears.

Iori looks at you expectantly, before blinking in slight puzzlement, tilting her head slightly to the side. "Chiaki-san? Is anything wrong? Am...did I say something--"

...No. Nothing's wrong. Everything's fine. You shake your head, and make a show of taking off your glasses and pinching the bridge of your nose. It's been a long day, you tell her, and it's not over yet. And it's not her, if she's worried about that. In any case, sure, she can come with you.

"Ah, thank you, Chiaki-san!" Iori smiles brightly at you, and takes your arm as the both of you make your way towards the entrance. The soft warmth of her body pressing against yours irritatingly, annoyingly comfortable, even in the antiseptic chill of the airconditioned stadium.

You could only hope that Midori took you at your word. ...Well, you shouldn't worry. The Callidus wasn't stupid, just...impulsive, at times. Not necessarily a bad thing, as she did save your life in Siberia without even thinking, but...two sides of a coin and all that. If she suddenly gets it into her head that she absolutely needs to apologize to Iori...

Fuck it. You'll cross that bridge when you come to it.

"...Nnn. Chiaki-san, you are cutting down on smoking, aren't you?" Iori suddenly says, breaking the silence between the both of you. You blink at her, and open your mouth to say that you have - when you realize that you're actually smoking right this very moment. ...You've actually taken out your pack of cigarettes from your inventory, tapped one out, lit it, and started sucking it down halfway without even knowing.

You're inwardly disturbed at this, but you manage to hide that from Iori by shrugging slightly. You're making the effort to, at least. That should count, right?

"I...I suppose so, Chiaki-san. But smoking is a filthy habit, you know." The idol crinkles her nose cutely. "Father used to smoke, until Mother threatened that she'd set his library on fire if he ever smoked one cigarette again. He didn't even touch snuff after that."

...That's a bit excessive, isn't it?

Iori giggles. "Well, that was indeed a bit overboard, even Mother thought so. But it was for his health, anyway. His lungs weren't in the best of shape then."

Well. That makes sense, at least. He doesn't have magically-regenerating lungs like you do.

"Hee. There is that, Chiaki-san." Iori smiles. "But, ah, I suppose I wouldn't mind if Chiaki-san smoked from time to time, even if she wasn't a Magical Girl."Just not every waking moment of every hour." She squeezes your arm, gently, before finally letting go. "Sorry about that, Chiaki-san. I just...I'm just glad we're friends again. I know you're not into physical contact much, but I couldn't resist." She giggles here, again. "And I really like your hair. It makes you look really cool, like some sort of samurai."

Samurai, eh? You don't think it does, but you can see where she's coming from.

Maybe you could pull off the look. Too bad the only sword you own is possessed by a fucking psycho.

The both of you make small, inconsequential talk while walking towards the entrance. Making it seem like the disaster of a meeting you had with her earlier didn't happen - at least, the bad parts of it. She seems to be quite relieved now, and is actually excited about the concert and her upcoming voice acting job.

"There's a lot of really intense scenes in the script, Chiaki-san. They're really pushing the boundaries of the rating system for this one, it looks like! And it's supposed to be on late-night programming, even!"

...Yeah. To this day, you still can't believe people Midori's work so much. The manga was fine, the merchandise is okay, but...well. You'll probably look into living as a hermit if they come out with a Hollywood movie, or a Broadway production.

In any case, the both of you get to the entrance lobby easily enough - and you see Kyoko, in her civilian outfit, loudly and animatedly talking to a rather wary-looking Kyosuke. It's here that she laughs at her own joke, before punching the young man in the arm, making you wince and making Kyosuke cradle his arm in pain while laughing himself. A forced, weak laugh.

You'd have laughed along if the punch didn't look as painful as it did. You could easily imagine a very nasty bruise already taking form underneath his suit.

"Oh, here she is! Hey, Murderface!" Kyoko cheers, waving an arm energetically. She's carrying a white canvas bag on her other arm. The person behind her - Midori, probably - is carrying what looks to be a rather long suitcase, the sort you'd carry a complicated flute - or rifle - in. It looks pretty heavy.

"Ah, Kyoko-san!" Iori chirps from your side, also waving. "It's been a long time!"

"Ooh, it's Iori-chan! Heyyy!" Kyoko's grin could have reached her ears. "How's the idolin' goin on? Did Sayaka stab anyone yet? Did Murderface throw up on anyone yet?" She grins at you, before pointing to Kyosuke, who's still checking to see if his arm could still move. "This guy peeped on you at the shower?"

"W-what? Nothing of the sort, Kyoko-san! Kyosuke-san has been nothing but professional, and both Sayaka-san and Chiaki-san as well! Honestly, Kyoko-san, that's dreadful of you to think that about them!" Iori shakes her head in mock offense, before giggling as well. "Ah, what brings you here, then, Kyoko-san?"

It's also here that you see Midori, but...not her, as you know her.

No, but belts were the main accent in Deculture concept so I went along with it.

Then again, I don't want to alter the design too much...

Well. You're relieved that Midori did take measures to prevent Iori from recognizing her. Making you feel a bit stupid and guilty about not trusting her to do so. But even then, you couldn't help but poke a bit of fun at her.

"Relax, newbie. Idols don't bite." Not-Midori blinks at you, and then smiles awkwardly, acknowledging your dig with a nod. She seems to hedge for a couple of moments, before clearing her throat and replying in a voice that's...well, completely unlike her original voice.

"O-of course, Warmaster Matsuda," The Callidus says meekly, before turning towards Iori and bowing. "P-pleased to meet you, Minase-san. My name is Homura. Akemi Homura. I'm....I'm a new recruit, as my Warmaster says."

"Oh, I see! Well, pleased to meet you too, Akemi Homura-san!" Iori says, returning the bow with typical grace. It's here that she glances at Kyoko. "Kyoko-san, I trust you're not going to mistreat her? You can get carried away sometimes, you know!"

"Eh? But she's not--" Kyoko blinks, before stopping herself just in time. Covering her near-slip with a forced guffaw. "A-ahaha! Well, I'm not gonna put her into the grinder yet, she's still too...uh...green and stuff! Yeah!" It's here that she swallows audibly. "Uh, green as in, like, inexperienced!" You resist the temptation to cram your hand into your face. "R-right, Murderface?"

Yeah. Yeah, right.

"Oh! Well, um, I hope so!" Iori doesn't seem to think this exchange as anything strange, and she turns back to 'Homura' with a smile. "If Kyoko-san is too rough on you, just tell Chiaki-san here, and she'll sort it out!"

"I'll...I'll keep it in mind, thank you," Not-Midori murmurs quietly, sporting a small smile on her own. She bows to Iori again, before turning to Kyoko and gesturing with the suitcase, a pained expression on her face.

"Oh! Oh, yeah! Murderface, here ya go, the clothes're for Sayaka, an' I got you something else to wear too, in case you decide to change outta your costume for once in a million years." She holds out the canvas bag to you, and you take it gladly. "An' here's the extra thing Sayaka asked for. Pretty heavy, so take care not to drop it or stuff." The Eversor takes it from Midori and makes to give it to you as well, before turning to Kyosuke with a grin and then giving it to him instead. "Here, you carry it, Kyosuke! Put those muscles to use for a change!"

"O-of course." Kyosuke pales as he accepts the suitcase - and you could see him straining a bit with the weight of the thing. "...What's in this? A rifle of some sort?"

"Sorta like that, sorta like that," Kyoko says cheerfully, before looking around. "Oh, hey, speakin' of! Where's Sayaka? I thought she'd be here to meet me, at least!"

How do you respond to this?

You tell Kyoko that Sayaka's currently guarding the Principal. You can go and fetch her if the Eversor really wanted to see the Blueberry, though.

"Oh, that so? Nah, it's okay, Ho...Homura-chan and I hafta get going at any rate. Yeah." Kyoko grins, throwing an arm around not-Midori's shoudlers. "Some leads we gotta look into and stuff! Right, Homura-chan?"

"A-absolutely, Kyoko-san," 'Homura' murmurs, nodding. Looks like she's also relieved that Iori bought her disguise. You'll have to talk to her about sometime, though...

"Oh, so soon?" Iori's smile falls a bit, but brightens up again. "Well, we should meet again sometime, Kyoko-san. With Mami-san and sayaka-san and the rest, soon enough!"

"Eh? Oh, sure, that sounds like a nice idea! We could make it a whole ocassion and stuff!" Kyoko grins. "You're up for that too, right, Murderface?"

...Yeah. Sure. Whatever.

"Hokay, we'll be going, then! Keep up the good work, we'll be watchin' the webcast when it comes up again!" Kyoko flashes you a thumbs-up sign. "Oi, Kyosuke, do your job, alright? Don't slack off!"

"I promise I won't, Miss Kyoko--" Kyosuke starts, before getting cut off by Kyoko delivering a blistering right deep into his gut. The impact is an awful sound, like someone tenderizing a steak with a sledgehammer. ...She probably wasn't even holding back, come to that. "Hah! Gotcha!"

"Kyoko-san!" Iori scolds the Eversor. "What was that for?! Kyosuke-san was just--"

"N-no, it's fine, Miss Minase. I'm...I'm alright." To his credit, the young man in the suit is still standing up. A bit doubled over, but still on his feet. "Just...just an in-joke shared between...Miss Kyoko and I." His voice is strained, wheezed through gritted teeth. He straightens up after a moment, the color drained from his face. "R-right, Miss Kyoko?"

Kyoko seems just as impressed as you are. "...Yeah. Just a joke!" She grins again. "Not bad, Kyo-kun, not too bad!" She pats his shoulder, none too gently, before turning towards Not-Midori. "Alright, let's blow this joint! Think I'm up for an early dinner, too!" The Eversor turns back to you and Iori, waving. "Right, see you guys later at the webcast!"

You make to say goodbye as well, but remember that Kyoko wanted to talk to you about something. You ask her about this.

"Hm? Oh, nah, that can wait 'till after the op. No rush, you got a lot on your plate already anyway!" Kyoko smiles at you, before making for the exit. "Tell Sayaka-chan I miss her, okay?"

You will. Not-Midori follows after the Eversor a moment later, but not before bowing to you and mouthing a silent farewell. You nod in acknowledgement, before watching her catch up with Kyoko.

As the two finally exit the building, it's here that you turn towards the stricken Kyosuke. ...He looks like he's just had a major organ pulped from blunt force trauma, but he's recovering some color to his face, at least.

"Ah, Kyosuke-san, are you okay?" Iori asks him, still concerned. "Kyoko did hit you pretty hard...what was that all about, anyway?"

"A-as...as we said, Miss Minase. Just an in-joke." He manages a smile, before taking out what looks like...the tip of a teal hoodie drawstring, out of his suit pocket. Kyoko's hoodie. "...Is this enough, Miss Matsuda?"

You give Kyosuke a nod. You're doubly impressed, now. You tell him that you'll back him up if no one in his agency believes him. It's not a mean feat, to put one up on Kyoko like that, without her noticing. Sure, the red-haired Eversor may be simple, but she wasn't the runner-up for the Rank Leader position for nothing.

It's the least you can do, after all. What with him looking like an inch from being put into the hospital.

"A-ahaha. Well. I'm sure it looks worse than it is." It's here that Kyosuke turns green, putting a hand to his mouth. "A-ah. Well. Um. Excuse me."

...Right. You let him go, but not before giving you Sayaka's suitcase thing. You might as well get it to the Eversor yourself, along with her clothes.

As Kyosuke runs off, both you and Iori make your way back to the stage. "Well, it was certainly nice to see Miss Kyoko again." Iori smiles as the two of you walk side by side. "She seems to be really enamored with Miss Sayaka, though. I wonder if she knows?"

...What? You turn to Iori, blinking. Of course Sayaka does. Doesn't Iori know that Sayaka and Kyoko are together?

"They are?" Iori's eyes go wide in unfeigned surprise. "I...I didn't know that! I only thought they were very good friends!"

Well. That's not completely false. Just multiply it a couple of times, you suppose, and add a healthy dose of girls kissing girls, not kissing guys, etcetera. You turn towards Iori, a small smile of your own. Couldn't she tell? Even you could, and you're the sort to miss things like that a lot.

"N-no, really, I couldn't, Chiaki-san." Iori insists, blushing. It's here that she faces forward once more, a hand on her cheek. "It must be really nice for them, though...! And they do make a very cute pair. Even their colors match, too!"

...What?

Idols.

You arrive back at the practice area. Most of the other idols have already left, with only a handful remaining. Sayaka is also present, seemingly fresh from the bath, and in her civilian clothes. At your arrival, Sayaka brightens up, and walks forward to meet you. Her eyes straying to the bag and suitcase in your hands.

"Kyoko left already? Ah, here, Murderface, lemme get those for you." Sayaka takes her stuff eagerly, most especially the suitcase.

You reply to the affirmative, and ask where the principal is.

"Still in there, doing her hair." The Blueberry winces. "Fuck's sake, Murderface, I've never seen so much hair in one place at the same time. Do you know that it's her NATURAL hair? All of that? She doesn't even use extensions! She's like 90% hair!"

Yeah, of course. Kyoko gonna Kyoko.

"Kyoko-san's still in good spirits as usual, Sayaka-san," Iori volunteers. "Oh, also, she brought along Homura-san, one of the rookies!"

"Homura...san? A rookie?" Sayaka blinks, looking at you. "I thought she was with Mido--"

You widen your eyes behind your glasses and shake your head slightly. 'Not Midori', you mouth at her.

"Ah, if...if you say so, Sayaka-san!" Iori says, thankfully still buying it. To your and Sayaka's collective relief.

"Ah, thank you!" Iori replies. "Well, um, I suppose I'll have to go on ahead as well, Chiaki-san, Sayaka-san." She smiles at the both of yo. "I'll see you tomorrow at the concert proper, then?"

The both of ou nod in response, and watch as Iori finally exits, escorted by the security detail. Once she's out of sight and earshot, it's here that Sayaka digs an elbow into your side.

"Fuck's sake, Murderface, that was close! And you didn't think to tell me about what Midori was gonna do?"

It's not your fault, you snap back at her, rubbing your side. Iori suddenly wanted to meet Kyoko. Midori disguised herself anyway, and it's working so far.

"Yeah, but..." Sayaka scowls. "Eh, nevermind. Least I got this, now." She lifts the suitcase up a few inches. "Feel a bit safer with this in my room. Should be handy too, incase anything happens tomorrow."

What is it, anyway? It's heavy and all. Is she trying to change ranks or something, bringing a rifle along?

"What?" Sayaka grimaces, looking as if you've just told her to make out with Deepthroat. "No! This is the thing I got from America. The one with the AR-15 firing mechanism in the sheath." She grins. "It's loud as hell and super unsubtle, but at least it's not like pulling swords outta cakes and stuff. This way I get to cut down on Grief Seeds too, use them only when I really need them and stuff."

Did you... notice the point in Decu's post where it was explicitly noted that she and Kyoko are fucking? Or the many previous times it was noted that she and Kyoko are fucking?

I mean, she could be bi, I guess.

This is based on a bunch of otakus being able to afford them, and QB being annoyed that they're taking market share away from the Ninth.

In the end, I figure part of the reason why bisexuality is so rare in fiction is that typically characters only have a single love interest, so whether they're gay/straight or bi doesn't really become relevant. Of course, things like love triangles and soaps still have no excuse, but hey.

Not too hard to counter, especially with the two two of the ninth at the location.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 07/17/13(Wed)07:42 No.26067149

You blink down at the case she's carrying. So that's what Sayaka asked Kyoko to bring, huh? You remember seeing it in their apartment, but you never got the chance to examine it properly. And - if you'll be honest with yourself - you were tempted to surreptitiously sneak it into your inventory before walking off. Just to borrow it for a day or two.

...This again. It's one of the few things about you that you can't figure out. Whenever you see something that could be used to blow something up, shoot something to pieces or leave it in smoking, burning ruins - you get this odd compulsion to appropriate it and stash it away into the space inside your shield. You've given in to it often enough - you're positive you saw a news article about the MiGs you took during your visit to Siberia - and besides the obvious high of getting away with something you're not supposed to, you also feel the urgency to...appropriate more afterwards. Like a compulsive hoarder, hoarding for something in the future.

It's here that you ask Sayaka if you can see it.

"Huh? What for?" Sayaka blinks. "You know what this already looks like. You were here at the apartment, right?"

Yes, but she was being a bitch then, and you didn't really get a close look at it. ...You'll pull rank if you have to.

"Dammit, don't be that kind of person, Murderface." The blue-haired Eversor scowls, before looking around. "...Well, I guess it's okay. Most of the idols've gone, anyway, and Ruri-chan's not going to be out for a bit yet..." It's here that she goes down on one knee, setting the suitcase down and undoing its locks. Two clicks and the squeak of greased hinges, and it's here that you see it again, nestled in its own customized foam inset. Blueberry Cheesecake Brownie, obviously well-maintained, its parts carefully cleaned and lovingly polished to a smooth, silken gleam.

"Here we go," Sayaka grunts as she carefully lifts it out of the inset. ...It is a beast of a thing, very nearly as long as Sayaka's tall. The firing mechanism is a misnomer - someone in Santa Destroy had taken literally 90& of an AR-15 rifle, welded it onto the sheath of a huge sword, and called it a day. The trigger, the magazine, the actual frame of the rifle is left unsubtly intact, machined only to give the entire thing a consistent silhouette.

The handle itself seems to have been modified too, with a secondary trigger jutting out of its matte black carbon frame. The trigger itself is glowing a faint red - you wonder what it's for.

"This thing's crazy advanced, I don't know how they did it." Sayaka starts, with the air of a kid showing off a new toy and desperately trying to sound nonchalant. "It even has a harness that automatically shoots out and snaps onto you when you unlock it. The straps come out here, see?" She points to an innocuous-looking disc-shaped object locked to the sheath's side. "You can even set it for lefties and righties if you want, and the entire thing moves on a sliding joint so you can even have it strapped to your back." The Eversor grins at you. "Neat, huh?"

Asking for a demonstration is a bad idea. And asking to try it is just stupid.

Remember, if it's a gun or golden, sure we'll procure it, but that's a sword...gun...thing. We don't need it and it's like Sayaka and Kyouko's twisted love child. We should keep our hand's off.

"Oh, these? Yeah, first thing I noticed when they gave it to me, too." Sayaka glances down at the weapon, holding it in both hands. "Right, uh. Assuming you've got it unlocked and the safety's off, this trigger-" She points at the larger of the two, the one still attached to the rest of the rifle it was taken from. "--fires a round specially designed for this kinda thing. The combustion of that round gets forced into this tiny barrel that's set into the mouth of the sheah, here, and it punches against the sword guard here." She points to the blade's hilt, which is basically one oblong carved out of thick plate iron, machined and beveled to resemble that of a katana's but obviously not all that concerned about decoration. "The force ejects the sword out of the sheath really hard and really fast."

...And what good does that do? Shooting someone with your sword? Wouldn't you be out of a sword then?

Sayaka smirks at this. "Well of course you don't shoot your sword at someone. It's for Iai, dumbass. See?" She places the sword at her side, one finger stroking the trigger, the other just barely brushing against the haft of the handle. "You pull the triggerr, sword blasts out, you catch it and use the momentum to add to your strike. It's all a matter of positioning it so that it follows the motion of what you're planning." There's a click as she pulls the trigger, pantomiming the rest. "Understand?"

"Americans." Sayaka shrugs. "But yeah, I agree with you there. First time I actually used it, I drew too late and it broke my arm and shoulder. Second time I drew too early - tore my arm completely off." It's here that she grimaces slightly, as if loathe to relive the memory. "There's a timing to it, and it's pretty tricky. Managed to get it before too long, though!"

...Right. What about the second trigger?

My theory is that there are actually 3 Homus in this timeline.

First one is the Homu of this timeline who could or could not be a Meguca. Since Coobie did not find anything on "Akemi Homura" either, someone is lying or it has to do with Malal`s Shenanigans who for some reason protected the real Akemi Homura or she has a different name.

The second one is the real Homura who is either dead, in suspension or a witch. She may or may not be related to the sarcophagus.

The third one would be us, Chiaki Matsuda who is either a copy made by one of the Officios for reasons unknown. Or by Pinky herself as part of her game after the real Homura was heavily wounded/killed.

"Second trigger activates the blade. Some sorta high-frequency power field. Lets it cut better and quicker. Also makes it really easy to set fire on something."

Well, that's a bit cooler. How do you unlock it, then?

"Well, first you place it where you want it to be, like so, an' then you say the password--" It's here that Sayaka pauses to narrow her eyes at you. "...You're not askin' all this shit because you're gonna steal it, right? Because I swear, Murderface, if you so much as even think about it--"

You? Steal something? How dare she. How dare she accuse her own Warmaster of such. You're not some sort of common two-bit thief with sticky fingers!

"Yeah, yeah, on-site procurement, whatever," Sayaka snaps at you. "Just leave this the fuck alone, alright? You got Kirika's Muramasa, be satisfied with that. This is mine."

Fine, fine. Now she can show you how she unlocks the damn thing.

"...Right. Well. Like I said, place it where you want it to be, hold it there, then press and hold down the second trigger." There's a faint beep, and then a mechanical chime reaching its crescendo - something charging up. "Then you say the password."

"ERROR." A gravelly, digitized voice suddenly speaks from a tinny speaker on the handle. "TRY AGAIN."

"...Jesus Christ. In front of you, even..." Sayaka blushes even harder, before glaring down at the sword, as if it'd offended her. "...Sakura Kyoko."

Two beeps, and then a series of metallic clicks clatter out as straps suddenly fly out of the device's side, pythoning around the Eversor's waist and clinching together. Another strap flinging itself up and over her shoulder, snapping across her torso and locking tight. Another click as Sayaka dry-fires the trigger - and she carefully pulls the blade out for you to see.

...Whoever designed it really had one thing in mind: making something that kills things good, but with a surgeon's laser-like precision. It had all the unflinching brutality of Kharn's chainsword, and the naked blood thirst of Kirika's Muramasa. A long flat blade of iron, burning red as if the blade was still fresh from being hammered out in a forge. The gentle curve of the impossibly-sharp edge belying just how much killing it's done, and how much killing it can still do.

"A bitch to maintain, though," Sayaka says offhandedly, ruining the moment. "Gotta take the sheathe apart every so often to oil the parts and clear debris and carbon scoring, stuff like that. Plus ya gotta replace the barrel every now and then, since it's not meant to contain that kind of combustion again and again and again." She takes a few swings of the sword - the red blade easily dwarfing her size - before sliding it back into its sheathe without even looking. As if she'd been using it every single day of her life.

...If she's got that kind of thing to use, why don't you see her using it more often?

"What?" Sayaka blinks up at you, the Eversor already now in the middle of putting the blade, sheathe and all, back into its suitcase where it slept. "Because it's not practical, like I told you! I mean, it's practical when I'm tryin' to use as little magic as possible, and possibly I could go on entire missions with this, but..." She looks down at the thing with a frown, before closing the suitcase on it. "...it doesn't feel the same. It's not as satisfying, I guess what I'm trying to say." It's here that she shakes her head. "Christ, why am I talking to you about this? You're a Vindicare."

Well, now. She doesn't have to be all rank-ist, or something like that. Vindicares and Eversors aren't that much different, it's just the kind of weapon that's different. She should check her privilege.

"The hell?" Sayaka narrows her eyes at the expression. "Now you're just sayin' nonsense. Come on, Ruri-chan's probably about to come out. Hopefully we'll be able to get back to the Hotel before too long." She gets back up on her feet, letting out a sigh. "Geh. I'm lookin' forward to getting some sleep, but without Kyoko..."

Jesus. You tell her to suck it up. It's just for a few days.

"Aw, shut up, what do you know?" Sayaka nudges your leg with the suitcase. "I'm not used to sleeping in an empty bed, that's all. Nothing strange, nothing perverted. Just that."

Well, she could ask her Ruri-chan to volunteer. Seeing as she'd taken a bath with her already.

"What? No, Christ." Sayaka makes a face, here, although you could tell it's a bit...forced. "I'm not into idols THAT way. Yeah, I like her music, I like her showmanship and expertise, but..." She pauses here, as if giving it some serious consideration. "Nah. I'm happy where I am. Kyoko's enough, and she's all I want."

...Well? Does the carpet match the drapes, or what?

It's here that Sayaka narrows her eyes at you. "Figures that'd be the first question you'd ask, Lewdface." Her voice, dripping with pure disgust and venom, suddenly lowers as she steps beside you and whispers close to your ear. "Actually, strangest thing. She's...well, either she got some work done or she's pretty good with a razor."

...What.

"Chiakii! Matsuda!!" Kirishima Ruri, the hairless one in Australia, suddenly slides into the scene - back in what appears to be a completely different outfit this time, and striking some rather goofy poses as she belted out your name. Still with black as a main color, but decidedly more schoolgirl-looking, with a button-up blouse, a tie, and a pleated skirt. Less frills all around, which helps in not making you feel like you're talking to a ball-jointed doll. "Yo!

My ears were burning earlier, were you two talking about Ruri-sama behind her back?" She steps up between the both of you, threading her arms through yours. "Come on, come on! What were you two talking about?"

Both you and Sayaka glance at each other at the same time - and it's here that the Eversor quickly looks away, crimsoning again. "Uh, ah, we..." She begins, stammering. "Um, Ruri-chan, we weren't...we were just talking about--"

--Hair, you finish for the Blueberry, as you take the Warmaster Cap from your inventory and put it on, carefully pulling down on the sides for a perfect fit. Specifically, hair belonging to Sayaka's significant other, and how it's very...well taken care of. If Ruri gets your meaning, you add after a moment, just to make it clear without spitting the entire thing out.

"Huh? I don't..." Ruri's brow furrows, clearly confused, before realization dawns on her face a couple of awkward seconds later. "Oh. OH! And here I was thinking that Sayaka was telling you about how I'm shaved down there, hahaha!" She giggles here, hugging the both of you. "Now I really feel stupid for mishearing you! Tee hee!" She sticks out her tongue cutely, before freeing her hand from your waist to knuckle her temple. "Sorry~!"

"...Wait, you heard us?" Sayaka blinks. "B-but, I was whispering, a-and you were--"

"Trained ears! Idols have to have good hearing so we can adjust our voice to the acoustics of a concert hall and match our tone to the music, right?" Ruri lets go of the both of you briefly to tap her ears. "Ah, but then, I did catch Sayaka-chan staring a couple of times, hehen~!"

Oh, so Sayaka-chan was staring, was she? You turn to the Eversor who looks away again, sweating slightly. Adultress. NTR-ing Blueberry Seductress!

"Ah, it's not her fault, Chiaki-chan, don't stare at her like that," Ruri reaches out to poke you in the cheek with a perfectly-manicured index finger. "Sayaka-chan told me about Kyoko-chan, and it's a real shame I didn't even get to meet her! I wanted to see that eyepatch, too! Eyepatches are super hot, you know! Especially on someone with long red hair!"

...Yes. Well. You can't argue with that.

"Isn't it?!" The super idol pouts, here. "Ruri-chan couldn't help but feel a bit jealous, too! But, of course," Her pout turns into a serious, grave expression, "Love between magical girls is the most fragile and most beautiful thing in the world, and I'm not going to do anything to break something like that with my own hands! I'd sooner give this all up and become a wrinkly OL with crow's feet and liver spots!"

This...this is all kinds of weird, but at least you're assured that Ruri's not going to try anything. Not yet, anyway.

There is something you'd like to ask, though.

"Hmm? What's that, Chiaki-san?"

...Does she have any tips about getting to be that kind of smooth?

"Hahaha! Well, of course I can share a few tips! Mind, it's a bit long, but the first thing you do is..."

The tip-sharing lasts, remarkably enough, the entire trip back to the Hotel. Apparently there's a lot about that kind of thing that you weren't aware of. Sayaka had a lot of questions to ask, too, something which you'll do your best not to think about when you're talking to Kyoko. It's a bit strange, though, that most of Ruri's advice seems to come from a second-hand source - as if she's not the one doing it herself.

Noriko was in the car with you as this went on, and you couldn't help but notice the young girl pressing her hands to her ears and hunkering down, completely red in the face.

In any case, the entire group gets back to the Hotel without any further incident. You waited outside with Ruri and Sayaka while Kyosuke and his goons performed a quick check of the entire building to make sure nobody snuck in while you were out - not that it wasn't guarded in the first place, anyway - and it's with relief that you finally get back into the suites. Sayaka made a beeline for her own suite that's just across the hall from Ruri's, saying that she needs to take another shower AND change into some more comfortable clothes.

You on the other hand escorted Ruri back into her suite, the super idol throwing herself onto the large, double king-size bed with a whumpf. Deepthroat, apparently, has her own room here, just next door, where Ruri can easily call for her.

"Haaah! Finally, bed! That was a long day!" Ruri groans, her two long pigtails spilling over the quilted cream blankets in silky streams of green. "Nnn, I wish I can just stay here forever and not worry about concerts or webcasts or interviews and stuff!" She stretches, here, much like a cat, her face scrunching up in toe-curling bliss. "Fwaah, this thing is really comfortable!"

...Not as comfortable as your chair, you resist replying, instead sticking an unlit cigarette between your lips and plopping yourself down on the couch opposite. Guard duty begins again, and you prepare yourself for a long, sleepless slog.

"...Aren't you going to get ready for bed?" Ruri asks after a moment, blinking up at you. "Shower's there, and I can lend you some silk PJs if you need 'em."

Ready for bed...? No, you're...you're supposed to be on guard duty. You're not supposed to sleep.

"No! No, that's no fun! That's why I got Kyosuke-kun and his bros to be on guard duty, so I get to have fun with you, Chiaki-chan!" Ruri sits up on the bed, pouting. "Go on, get showered and then get ready for bed!" She points towards the extravagant bath. "I'll wait here until you're done!"

...It seems that your client is asking you to sleep with her.

You glare at the idol, before shaking your head. ...No. You're not getting in bed with a client. That's like the first thing they teach you in Vindicare School. Well...maybe the second. The first is to always double-tap to be sure. ...Actually, maybe the third, since the first is being taught the difference between a clip and a magazine--

"But you need to sleep! Even Magical Girls need to rest--" It's here that Ruri narrows her eyes at you, as if suddenly figuring something out - before suddenly bursting out in laughter. "O-oh, wait! Wait! Did you think I was...I was asking you to sleep with me! Like, have sex?"

...Wasn't she?

"Ahahaha! N-no, no!" The super idol bursts into laughter again, rolling around the memory foam mattress. It takes her a moment to calm down, sitting up again, still giggling. "Jeez, Chiaki-chan. I know you don't really like me, and how you think I asked for you specifically because I've got some super shady 'plans' for you--" she mimes quotation marks with her fingers at the word - "...but honestly, did you think I was going to seduce you or Sayaka-chan because I could? Because I'm rich, or because I'm a super idol?" It's here that her voice loses all of its cheerfulness, shedding it like some sort of mask or filter. Letting you hear her actual, normal voice for a change. "Did you honestly think I was that terrible of a person, Chiaki-chan?"

You're silent at this, taken aback by the sudden candor from the idol. She shakes her head here, taking a pillow from the bed and hugging it to her arms.

"You're not the first Magical Girl I hired, you know." She half-murmurs this into the pillow. "And the girl that they sent for me....she was really high-strung, just like you. Professional to the point of rudeness, just like you. She also never slept the entire time she watched over me, even if it was practically safe for her to."

She looks down, her curiously-bright blue eyes flickering just a bit. "I woke up to find her crying about something. Turns out it's her brother, who's in the hospital. The Officio had to send someone else. I heard she was...retired a few weeks after that."

...Well, you don't exactly have a sick brother, but--

"That's not the point. Silly." Ruri cuts you off. "Look, it's...alright, I was having a bit of fun when I wrote that request to Kyuubey. Meant it to be taken the completely wrong way, and I guess I pushed it a bit today. But..." She looks at you now. "I meant what I said. I wanted to get to know Magical Girls better. You specifically, Chiaki-san. But I also meant that I wanted to have fun with you. The kind that...doesn't necessarily involve that kind of thing. I wanted you to take this opportunity to take a break, even for just a little bit. Because...you never know when you'll be able to take a break again, right?"

She pats the space on the bed beside her. "I want you to sleep here beside me. No hanky panky, maybe cuddling but that's as far as it goes. If you're not cool with that, then you can sleep on the couch." Ruri smiles at you, and you couldn't help but feel that it's a smile just for you - a genuine kind of smile. "Come on. Just go and get a shower and change, you don't even have to sleep on the same bed as me. Okay?"

Rest doesn't really come into the equation, but...you suppose you could do with a bit of shuteye. At least she clarified the situation. It was just so that you're clear with everything.

"Right, I gotcha, Chiaki-chan! I'll try to be clearer from this point on~!"

Idol voice is back. Well...Fine, you'll take a shower. Wear the PJs if they don't look all that stupid. Sleep...well, you're still undecided on that.

"Yay! Here you go!" Ruri leans over the opposite lip of the bed - giving you a strange, awkward view of her posterior - before tossing you a shrink-wrapped, folded set of light purple pajamas. Silk, too. "There you go! Feel free to use any of the toiletries there if you want!"

You shake your head as you step into the bathroom that you once washed a bloodied, traumatized Iori in.

You take off your glasses, cancel your transformation, and hope that you're not doing anything stupid. You stuff the hat back into your inventory, too. Just in case.

Your shower doesn't take long, despite you making sure to do all the things Mami had taught you. You even made sure to dry your hair properly with a few passes of the hair dryer, and ran a hairbrush through it for completeness' sake. Snapping a rubberband to re-engage the ponytail, you walk back out of the bathroom, already in the lavender pajamas.

...Well, it's silk, so it's comfy. A bit too comfortable, if you'll be honest. You're not really a sleepwear kind of person.

"Ahaha, that looks cute on you, Chiaki-chan!" Ruri claps. ...She's not wearing the same pajamas as you, but rather a sheer white nightgown that ends halfway at the hip. Sheer enough to be nearly transparent, revealing rather tasteful light green underwear. "There, don't you feel a bit more relaxed? How do you feel, now?"

...Relaxed, you guess. Not something you're used to, but...it's nice, you suppose.

"See? A nice shower and nice bedclothes always go a long way~" Ruri grins as she pats the bed beside her, once more. "Now, where'll you sleep? Here, or at the couch?"

I feel like it's split right down the center between that and concluding (often with some amount of resignation or regret) that their position prevents them from seeking the creature comforts that the average person is afforded.

~~Not sure what's keeping us from humoring her by staying on the bed until she's asleep and then slipping out and doing our goddamn job dutifully. The principal gets to feel like she's helping, and we get to feel like we're doing our due diligence on the guard duty front. We'll be awake on the couch when she wakes up, and can just tell her that we didn't want to wake her when we got up.~~

You stare at the expectant super idol for a moment, before...shaking your head again. Saying that you're not going to sleep at all - you just did this to humor her. That's all.

Ruri is visibly crestfallen at this. "...Why? Didn't I tell you that it's okay for you to sleep? Look, if you're that worried, just sleep on the couch. I just want you to be comfortable and be able to relax--"

You hold up a hand to stop her. You weren't finished, you explain. You do appreciate the gesture, honestly, and while you have an unreliable memory at the moment, you're pretty sure that a client being concerned for paid help is a rare thing. You understand what she's trying to do. It's her turn to understand what you're trying to do, now - and that's to do the job you've been given, properly and efficiently. You do the job in front of you, and if you're lucky, you get to go home.

She knows just as well as you do that the last time you fell asleep on the joob, something terrible very nearly happened. That was your fault, and you want to be able to show everyone relying on you - including her - that you've learned your lesson then. You appreciate her worrying about you, and you're as relaxed as you can be at the moment - hell, you don't even have a gun close at hand, now, and you usually are antsy when it comes to that.

So thanks, but no thanks. You've taken the shower, you've worn her pajamas, you've played along as much as you could. But willingly compromising her safety in the name of fun...well, she can call you the anti-fun police all she likes, but you're not going to make a mistake like that ever again. You're not going to sleep, and that's final. You'll get your sleep, but only when you're sure that it doesn't jeopardize your client's safety.

"...Iori-chan's right. You don't bow to fate easily." There's a coldness to Ruri's voice, now, but there's also an impressed smile curling her lips. "Alright, Chiaki-chan. You win. I'll go sleep on my bed, vulnerable and helpless, while the Warmaster of the Ninth watches over me."

. . .Does she really have to put things like that?

"You're the one deciding to stay awake, so you deal with it and take responsibility." Ruri sticks her tongue out at you, before reaching underneath a pillow and snapping an elastic blindfold over her eyes. "Don't think I've forgotten that you still owe me a date, Chiaki-chan. We'll have that sometime before this ends." She lies back, drawing up the covers up to her chest and then snuggling into her pillow, yawning. "Goodnight~!"

[+50 Ruri Points!]

You murmur the required reply to that, before taking your place on the couch and leaning back, there. Pulling out the holstered Golden Desert Eagle and placing it on your lap.

...For a high-energy idol, Ruri falls asleep quite easily, you note. It's only been a handful of minutes when you started waiting when you noticed her beginning to snore. A cute kind of snore, but snoring all the same.

Even idols snore, you guess. Even the super kind.

It's here that you hear a beeping sound - and realize that it's the headset you also stuffed into your inventory. You pull it out and put it on - and immediately hear Kyosuke's voice, calling for you it seems.

"...Matsuda? Miss Matsuda?"

You tone down the volume as you reply in low tones. What did he want?

"Six girls here at the lobby, Miss Matsuda. All of them have Ninth Officio Identification. ...A Vindicare Squad and the Callidus Rank Leader, or so I'm told. Miss Karasawa Enishi." A moment's pause. "Your orders on how to proceed here, Miss Matsuda?"

We asked for her.
From... 109th thread I think?

>You do have a couple of things you'd like to request, if he's asking.
>"Very well. Tell me and I'll do my best to accommodate."
Right. Yes. Well. First off, you'd like to ask Kyuubey to try and scour for as much information about your client as he can. She seems to know quite a lot about you and the industry, and she's even admitted to having a relationship with one. There's also the incident two years past, when a dead body that was a dead ringer for Ruri was found in Santa Destroy, during one of her concerts. Everything he can find about the idol, basically.
>"...Well, I suppose I can have the Vanus check again. Perhaps they'll find something about that incident. As for her prior history to any agents...well, Matsuda, we do try to respect the privacy of our clients. Blackmail has stopped being one of our main revenue streams." A pregnant silence, here. "...But I'm sure we'll be able to find something. I will see to it personally."
>Right. Fine. You'd like that delivered to you via your phone as soon as possible.
>"Right. Anything else?"
>Yes. A Callidus support specialist. Someone reliable and professional, who doesn't get starstruck easily. If the Tenth is involved with the Tojo Group, then there's the possibility that a few Magical Girls will be sent your way, to mess things up and do some damage. Any other threat can easily be taken care of between you and Sayaka, but if a Callidus gets sent, then at least you'll have someone to counter it.
>"I see. Very well. I'll send the best I have on active duty. Expect to receive her tonight. She'll be accompanying the Vindicares you requested as overwatch."

If this is the gameplan, (and it seems like a reasonable one,) we should probably make sure to let Sayaka know that she should be expecting company.

As amusing as it would be for her to open the door yelling "What it it now, Murderface?" only to come face to face with a whole squad of equally-confused backup and a demurely amused Enishi, on the off-chance we're shadowrunning for a genuine reasons, we don't want people getting the drop on her.

Green Green Magica, Chapter 1

"Midori-chan!"

Class had ended, and most of the students had already began to shuffle out of the room. Midori looked up at the cheerful hail, and quickly leaned forward, folding her arms over her notepad and resting her chin in one hand. Despite her best efforts, though, it was obvious that she was trying to hide what she was drawing. Yukiko strode down the aisle of seats toward Midori, and stopped at a respectful distance, clasping her hands demurely before her and giving the green-haired girl a gentle smile.

Midori returned it as best as she could manage, feeling as if her own expression looked stilted compared to the cute, honest smile sported by her short-haired classmate. Yukiko smiled wider in response, either oblivious to her classmate's awkwardness or just politely ignoring it.

"I was wondering, have you decided what club you're going to join? There's not much time left to sign up."

Midori glanced aside, starting to roll her pencil between her fingers. "Well.. Ah, probably the imaginary club. I don't really have time to join one in the first place."

"Oh? Why is that?" Yukiko tilted her head just a little, lips parted curiously, an expression Midori couldn't help but find endearing. She responded with an apologetic smile. "Ah, well, ya know, I've got a part time job."

"Ohh.. Really? That's too bad." The girl's disappointment was obvious, but after a few beats of awkward silence, she perked back up. "I thought for sure you'd go for the art club, or calligraphy club, or something. But, having a job is cool, too. I'm kind of jealous. My parents won't let me get one, so I never have any money for anything."

It wasn't as if Midori could spare much on anything she wanted, either, but she decided to leave that unsaid. "I guess! Ehehe.."

Yukiko craned her neck up a little, and Midori realized the inevitable question was coming. "Say, can I see what you're drawing?"

"No thanks. I mean, no.. Sorry! It's not really anythin' at all in the first place, really! M-maybe later when I do something better." Midori mumbled rather lamely, scrunching herself up over her notepad even further, even less like someone merely leaning against their desk and more like a guilty child trying to cover a mess they made. Most of her classmates had long since given up on asking her things like that, or bothering with her at all. Since Yukiko was a recent transfer student, though, Midori knew she had a chance to try and befriend her before the girl found out what a nerd she was.

A rather big nerd, as Midori was considering basing a background character in her story on Yukiko. She did like the girl, thinking her shoulder-length, playful-looking orange hair juxtaposed cutely against such a refined personality. There were already a few sketches of her in the deeper recesses of her notebook, something she caught herself doing every now and then.

After a few beats, Midori piped up, eager to change the subject again. "S-so.. What kind of club do you think you'll join?"

"Well.. I was thinking either the board game club, or maybe the drama club. I hope I'm not the only girl if I pick the game club, though." Yukiko gave a small shrug, looking nervous at the thought.

After Midori's brief stay in the so-called "animation appreciation club" last year, she couldn't help but agree with that sentiment, even if it had eventually lead to her meeting her boyfriend. She spent a few more minutes making small talk with Yukiko, during which she packed up and they walked together, before giving an anemic wave as they parted ways at the school gate.

Unlocking her bicycle, a vintage affair with chipped blue paint, she lifted it over to face the sidewalk before hopping on, and biked the short distance to the commercial district for work.

After a rough evening in uniform (and getting chewed out by her shift manager for some perceived slight), she made the long trip home, pedaling lazily as she enjoyed the cool air of the late evening. Part-timing at WcDonald's was hardly a glamorous affair for anyone, but Midori was raised by chefs, who had a much higher standard of cuisine. Watching fries warm up under a heat lamp of all things made her feel as if little bits of her soul were burning away, like so many particles of grease. She found it far less troubling to deal with the customers, where at least she could be distracted by some vague sense of acquaintanceship. At least from the ones who weren't angry.

A little over halfway home, the city started to slowly age around her as she progressed, the buildings growing older, cracks in concrete starting to become apparent, and the average age of the clientele of the surrounding businesses sharply rising. The darkness was broken by what city lights still worked, the often-shaded windows of buildings, and the occasional neon signs, with oppressive crimson hues that seemed to give this district its name.

She made the last turn onto the street from home, passing the Deli Heal Agency on the corner - a business Midori's mother sternly warned her to never enter for any reason, not even to seek employment - and was on the street leading home. Among the many places of questionable business was a building that stood out, though in a way that was more flashy than gaudy. Its vintage, distinctly Japanese design showed a clear intent - it looked old because it was classy, as opposed to the buildings around it, which were modern once and had aged since.

It was the best-maintained building on the street (Midori knew that much, as she'd replaced some of the fixtures and filled in some of the cracks herself): Hanegawa's Ramen restaurant. The family business, and the family home.

Midori turned into the alleyway behind it and came up to the rear shed, taking a careful look around as she dismounted and pulled out her keys. She gave the unadorned keyring a practiced spin on her finger before locking her bike away and proceeding inside the building's back room, her schoolbag slung over her shoulder.

She decided it was probably too late to call her boyfriend, but it wasn't too late to score some dinner and get back to drawing, at least. She did have a new Miracle Midori outfit concept to finish, the very same piece she had been working on earlier, before Yukiko interrupted her.

Slipping off her shoes, she headed upstairs to the family living space, absently enjoying the usual sounds of dishes clinking and familiar, savory smells of restaurant-quality cooking. As she crossed the threshold of the living room, she heard a distinct noise, someone clearing their throat. She froze in mid-step, blinking as she looked at the source - her father sitting at their spartan dinner table, eyes closed and muscular arms folded. Obviously waiting for her, in a surprisingly stern manner. Hanegawa Ryoutarou.

She turned to face him fully, bringing both hands together, fidgeting a bit with the handle of her schoolbag. "Ah.. Mom's watchin' the customers, right?" she murmured, mentally berating herself for stating something completely obvious.

"Midori-chan. Sit."

Midori immediately did so. Right where she had been previously standing, in fact. Her father said nothing. After a moment, she scooted forward to actually sit at the table across from him, after realizing her mistake. Although she was fairly tall even when sitting, she barely seemed to be two-thirds of her father's own massive frame.

Watching his meaty arm raise (seemingly with some deliberation) as he massaged the bridge of his nose, Midori could feel herself start to sweat. She wondered what she was in trouble for now, and could only pray he hadn't discovered that box at the bottom of her closet. Or the box under her bed. Or the box in the attic. She decided that if she survived this, she was definitely going to get rid of the box in the attic.

Helpfully, Midori piped up again. "Y-ya know, I don't mean to impose, but at this hour it really would be good for you to be downstairs with the customers.."

"Midori."

"Y-yes?"

Yet another moment passed. And then her father opened his eyes, the same shade of crimson as his daughter's as he finally met her stare. Another moment passed. "I'm sorry. Just let me say that much at first," he said, his eyes flicking away briefly before looking back at hers. "I was hoping I'd think of a really good fatherly speech to make this easier, but.. I couldn't really come up with anything." He offered a half-hearted, awkward smile.

He continued. "...The lenders aren't letting us off, after all. And Kai quit. Long story short, between what we owe on both the restaurant and your mom's treatments, I can't afford to hire any more help, assuming I could even get anyone else in here. And I know it's selfish, to still want us to have our cake and eat it, too, but we've put way too much work into this place, ya know? So even though I already.. Did a shameful thing, in asking you to get a job to help us out, I.. I need to ask again."

The green-haired girl's eyes widened as she saw him squeeze his closed, and she could have sworn that she saw him tearing up. Ryoutarou unfolded his arms, placing his hands on the table with a heavy thud, jarring the cup of tea set before him as he lowered his head. "For just a while, I'd like to ask you to take a break from school entirely and help out at the restaurant instead."

Seconds of silence gave way to what seemed like minutes.

Finally, Midori swallowed, the first sound from either of them in what felt like a pregnant eternity, her eyes locked upon the slicked-back hair of the man's bowed head.

She quietly accepted the proposal, of course. How could she not? She was the only daughter of the Hanegawas, after all.

Midori spent the rest of the evening laying on her bed, her outdated phone in hand as she stared at the ceiling. Despite the hour, she had texted her boyfriend, who didn't understand why she would go along with this. She had to admit Tooru was getting a bum deal, since they usually only got to see each other at school, and now they wouldn't even have that. She promised to make it up to him soon.

How she would do that, she didn't know. Maybe she'd let him go all the way, or something.

Assuming he would even still be interested.

She sighed, bringing up her phone again to check for his next reply, even though it had made no indication of an incoming text yet. The girl wished that she had Yukiko's number, even though she would have felt strange asking for it, given they were barely friends, if even that. And if she wasn't going to school anymore, they weren't going to see each other again anyway, so it was a moot point.

All she wanted to do now was close her eyes and find some peace from the dull ache in her chest, but for Hanegawa Midori, nothing came easy. Not even sleep.

it. Three minutes past midnight. Only two left before show time.

K. The enigmatic right hand of the Seventeenth's lead Culexus. Some said she was the ghost of warmaster Brie returned from the grave. Others said she was in possession of Odette's left eye. All they knew for sure, was that she was called the Khan.

K's white suit had become a trademark of sorts. A pure white racing suit from toes to helmet underneath a white satin jacket with a golden scorpion on the back. That, and her white 1970 Dodge Challenger. The car was just as mysterious as its owner amongst the Officio. No one could figure out if she'd always had it or if it was a part of her magical girl kit - there were even rumours that it could drive itself and had a mind of its own. Some went so far as to swear they'd seen K talking with it, actually holding a conversation.

A pair of loud, booming shots rang out from inside the building. K's hand wandered to the police scanner on the dash, slowly turning the volume up.

The Culexus let out a short chuckle that came out as a burst of vox-corrupted static. No matter how much he tried, the incubator could never quite manage to get the police on his payroll. Then again - she thought - if he did, she'd be out of a job.

K's fingers thrummed on the steering wheel. Four minutes past midnight. Any other person might have been nervous, but K was used to jackholes leaving everything to the last second. She made a deal, and a deal she would keep.

Her eyes drifted across the parking lot, still wet from the rain that had stopped just moments ago. A tall girl with long blonde hair stepped out of the building's back door first, an enormous rifle held lazily over her right shoulder. She sauntered toward the car slowly, then popped the trunk. Her eyes kept flicking back to the door nervously as she fumbled to unscrew the barrel.

The metal door to the building squealed open as a boyish girl with ragged black hair ran out at a full sprint. In her hands was a silver briefcase, clutched tightly to her chest. K leaned over again to flip the passenger seat back into position - just in time for the second girl to leap in and slam the car door shut behind her.

K had already slammed on the gas by the time she reached the second 'Go'. She almost found it patronizing that her colleagues felt the need to tell her to go. As if that wasn't the entire reason she was there in the first place. K knew her job. She got a call from Holly. She told her where to be, at what time and for how long. That was it. When the timer ran out, K did what she did best; she drove.

"You had me scared there for a second," the blonde said, a slight laugh decorating her words.

"I had ME scared," the other replied between breaths. "How was I, Khan?"

"Is that my score or-"

"You had ten seconds left, Fredrica," the blonde answered, speaking for the Khan.

"Shit," Freddy breathed, leaning back and placing an arm on the window sill. "The hell is this anyways?" She asked, giving the briefcase a good rattle.

"We don't ask questions, sister," Gertrude replied. "We do as we're told. Such is the way of things."

"I at least like to know who it is I'm stealing from," the black-haired Eversor grumbled, still looking the steel case over. "'s professional courtesy."

With a single sentence from the police scanner, the car's occupants went silent. The leather of K's gloves crunched as her grip tightened around the wheel. A familiar sensation crawled up her spine. The car continued down for two more blocks before the Culexus suddenly shifted into reverse, backing the car down an alley with expert precision. The headlights went off and the car went still.

A flicker of light began to grow along the edge of the alley's mouth. The eyes of the three girls focused on it intently, none of them daring to breathe. Freddy's leg shook unconsciously as she balled up both hands in front of her mouth. The police car slowly passed, K silently praying all the while that she'd parked far enough back. As gradually as it appeared, the cruiser vanished as it passed the alley. Leather crunched as the Culexus tightened her grip on the wheel.

"-Dundas and Manning clear-"

The twins breathed a sigh of relief - only to be interrupted when K suddenly slammed the car into reverse, using only the rear-view mirror as she sped backward. As soon as the alley widened into a dimly lit back street the tires screeched as she pulled a quick one-eighty.

K always tried to keep her jobs quiet. None of that action movie bullshit where the driver seemed to try his level best to attract as much police attention as possible. She could barely bring herself to see those films as comedies. Besides, K had a sixth sense for cops. And a seventh for knowing streets. And an eighth that told her how to operate any kind of vehicle as if she'd been behind the wheel for years.

Not once did she ever want to take back her wish, despite being cursed to be an existence that made others sick by her very presence. Not once, despite never being able to see her family or friends again. Not once, even on the jobs that just made her want to tie her client to the rear bumper and drag them down the highway until it stopped being funny.

Not once.

K's Challenger wove through side streets and residential districts like needle and thread. Any police cruisers that came into sight were always one step behind, just a moment too late to see the ghost car. Deep down, the Culexus wanted to try working jobs in somewhere more dangerous, where the cops came after you with helicopters and SWAT teams at the drop of a hat. Maybe she'd take a vacation to Santa Destroy some time. Just for a little spice in her routine.

There were dozens of parking garages in Toronto; only nine were connected to the Officio's parking network. Empty garages across from office buildings where the lights never seemed to go out, but no one ever entered or left. There were always a few of those in every city, K had noticed. They were often unmarked, or belonged to an obscure company that no one had ever heard of. If they had lawns, they'd seem perpetually mowed, despite no gardener ever being seen. Most of them belonged to an Officio. K idly wondered about the select few that didn't.

It took longer, but K's route was the easiest. She didn't need speed. Just a bit of stealth and patience. Soon enough, the car rolled up in front of a run-down garage just a bit too far from any major city attractions. It had an automated toll booth. K hated them, even knowing that this one wasn't entirely automated. As she rolled down her window, the Culexus jabbed a finger at the 'Request Help' button. After a short beep, a familiar voice called out from the speaker.

"How can I help you?"

"Delivery," K muttered in reply.

"Come on through, Khan," Holly said through the speaker. "Call me as soon as you can. Got something urgent for you before you head out west."

The car bumped and bounced as it drove down into the depths of the garage. Each floor was silent and empty, an eery stillness pervading throughout. Two, three, four... Finally the Challenger rolled down to the ninth and final floor. Unlike the rest, every spot on the ninth floor was filled save one. The cars were all different though a sharp eye could tell that the license plates of each and every one ended with a one and a seven.

K rolled into the single free lot, nestled between some fancy foreign car and a pickup truck. She wondered exactly what kind of magical girl would dare drive a pickup. As if they didn't already have an image problem.

And then she remembered one who did.

The three magical girls exited as the car came to a halt. Gertrude quietly retrieved a suspiciously heavy looking guitar case from the trunk while Freddy passed the briefcase between her hands impatiently. It wasn't until they reached the elevator that they finally spoke up.

"Guess this is it, huh?" Freddy said. "Was nice seein' you again, Khan. Say hi to Harry for me when you get home."

"Likewise," Gertrude added as she pressed the elevator's button. "It was lovely working with you."

K nodded. It wasn't until after a pause that lingered just a bit too long that she replied with a simple, curt, "Thanks. I'll tell her."

The twins nodded as they stepped into the elevator. The Culexus silently returned it, not looking away until the doors hissed shut.

Now alone in the silence of the garage, K made her way to a bank of payphones. Several were out of order, one seemed to be missing its phone entirely. The Culexus picked up one and dialled a number that had slowly been engraved in her mind over countless years.

One ring.

Then two.

"Yo," came a somber, calm voice entirely unlike the Vanus that K expected.

"Molly?" The Culexus asked. She fought to keep herself from asking what the outward-eye was doing answering Holly's phone.

"Yeah, hey Khan," the other half of the Vanus team finally answered. "Sis is a bit of a mess right now. Stuff happened. I'm covering her workload."

A second pause came as K thought for a moment. She could have sworn that she was greeted by Holly coming in to the garage. Though, it may have been Molly and K simply didn't notice. Their voices sounded nearly identical at times.

"I was told there was something urgent," K said. It was more of a statement than anything else.

Yeah, uh, listen," the Vanus replied, seeming as though her train of thought was a bit muddled. "I need you to run a pick up job. One body bag. Disposable car. You'll be picking up one of ours in critical condition. Girl named Mona Bernard. Need you to slip in before police catch wind of it."

"We don't know what happened yet. She called in, asked for back-up then passed out. Retrieve her body and soulgem, along with any pieces. You'll be driving Sue back."

The Culexus nearly dropped the phone. It had always been her dream to try driving the fastest ride in all of the Officios. But if she was returning it, then that could only mean-

"Yeah. Odette's gone. Can you do the job?"

K's only answer was a quick "Yeah."

"Good. I've already got into the police records for the gig with the twins. The official cause of the supposed gunshots was a misheard champagne cork. Nothing more."

"Doesn't matter," Molly interrupted. "Get to work, Khan."

It was nearly one in the morning by the time K pulled up in front of the Bernard mansion. Odette's armoured car silently stood guard outside the main gate like an enormous steel watchdog. K slid out of her borrowed Japanese sedan, the leather of her pants squeaking against the leather of the seats.

She couldn't help but feel dirty and wrong as she dropped down through the hatch in Sleepy Sue's turret. It was like cheating on her lover. The interior, K found, was not quite as the rumours said. It was not entirely hollow, in fact quite the contrary. It was cramped and claustrophobic, with all of the parts one would expect from the Puma.

K squirmed into the driver's seat with no small amount of difficulty, then took a deep breath as she rested her hands on the steering wheel. That familiar sensation wormed its way into her brain. The feeling of suddenly knowing something that she hadn't mere moments ago. She knew exactly how the vehicle worked and how to push it to peak performance.

The white-suited Culexus took the opportunity to drive a few laps in front of the gate, revelling in the feeling of achieving one of her biggest dreams. Under her helmet, she wore a grin not unlike that of a child taking the bike they got for Christmas out for its first ride. Finally deciding she'd had enough, K lined it up with the gate and just the right angle, then slammed on the gas.

Tires screeched as the armoured car flew forward. It smashed through the wrought iron with a percussive cacophony of clanging and banging. If the neighbours weren't already calling the police, K figured they would be now.

The trip up the drive took far longer than K had expected. The path wound through trees and bushes while Sue rumbled over cobblestones.

K simply stared as she pulled up in front of the mansion. The entire south side of the building was pock-marked with holes of splintered wood and plaster. Parts of it looked as though the house was barely holding itself up.

A rubber-handled claw hammer materialized in her hand as she stepped up the front door, a black body bag hefted over one shoulder. The first swing only managed to dent the door knobs. Wood splintered and caved on the second. On the third, the knobs were smashed in, allowing K to kick down the door.

The entrance hall was even more of a mess than the rest of the house. Smears and pools of still drying blood added to the rest of the scattered debris.

She needed only to follow the path of destruction to find the broken magical girl. Mona had managed to sit herself upright against one of the book cases, a smear of crimson marking the distance she'd dragged herself. K had to admire her tenacity. Even with a gaping hole in her side and a missing leg, she'd made it that far.

Quickly searching the girl, K found her soulgem: a swirling orb of purple in the centre of a silver rose pendant. A subdued and classy piece of jewelry. It seemed to fit Mona, from what little K could assume of her. The gem still looked clean enough to last a few more hours. It would be close, but K could get it to the incubator on time.

The Culexus laid the sack in front of the fallen girl and quietly unzipped it. She gently picked up the girl's body, stowing her away with care. It only took a moment to find the missing piece of Mona against the opposite wall. K placed it right where it should have been, had it been attached.

Mona's body was lifted in a gentle bridal carry - it was the most K could do for her. It wasn't until she was already at the doorway that she noticed the dead man slumped over what K could only assume was his work desk. If this was the Bernard home and the girl was a Bernard then that meant-

K shook her head. The deal was to retrieve the girl. Nothing more. She let out a long sigh, transformed into a drawn-out burst of static by her helmet. If only she could just wish away the world's suffering, she thought. If only things were that easy.

Despite this, she put one foot in front of the other and found herself leaving the building.

The night called.

If they try to break the door down and attack, they're fakes. If they don't, they're probably legit.

The FACT of the matter is that it does NOT hurt to be overly cautious when we've already confirmed an enemy capable of screwing with minds. We have to keep security as tight as we possibly can. It should be noted that she was 'just a friend'. Here we're talking about the people we requested ourselves. Including a rank leader. If you're going to assume that the Tenth have cracked our internal communications, you're giving them too much credit.

Fuck, it doesn't even make any sense for them to do anything. They want Ruri to sign the contract not off her. The Tojo group is too eager to go legit not..whatever it is you're trying to hint at here.

Please remember that Ruri suspects they've compromised her security guards. It doesn't take cracking internal communications to just eavesdrop on a request for backup. Or just hide listening bugs everywhere. Hell, they don't even have to have a corrupt guard do anything if they've got a MG with supernatural senses. Or even half-decent spying technology - if we were near a window when we requested backup they could have heard every word we said, for an example.

Or maybe they've got a stakeout watching the Officio and noticed that a group was heading our way, and arrived a few minutes before them in the hopes of being let through security to retrieve the target before their cover is blown by the actual team arriving.

My point is there are plenty of ways for them to know.

>Fuck, it doesn't even make any sense for them to do anything. They want Ruri to sign the contract not off her. The Tojo group is too eager to go legit not..whatever it is you're trying to hint at here.
They were willing to use physical violence to get her to sign. I wouldn't put it past them to just outright kidnap her to get her away from any protections then force her to sign before letting her go free.

MAGICAL GIRL
NOIR QUEST

You glance back at the super idol sleeping soundly in her bed before murmuring your reply to Kyosuke. The security detail is to allow them unescorted entrance to the Hotel proper, and to be directed to the Penthouse. You will meet them outside Ruri's room. But the visitors are to be told that the room they're looking for is the room Sayaka's currently retiring in.

"Understood, Miss Matsuda." Kyosuke replies, and you hear him relay your orders to his team mates before you mute the headset's volume again. Yawning as you strap the shoulder holster around yourself once more. Relishing the tightness of the straps over the silk pajamas that Ruri forced you into.

...Well, no. You'll be honest, the pajamas are pretty comfy. You wouldn't mind a set, something to wear while taking the odd nap or two on your favorite piece of green-colored furniture.

After a few minutes' of waiting, you hear footsteps heading down the hallway outside - and it's here that you catch some mumbling, followed by a smart series of knocks on the door just across from Ruri's room.

"Matsuda-sama!" A smooth, svelte voice, originally haughty but now spoken in somewhat adoring tones, calls out. "Matsuda-sama, we are here, as you've requested! Please, allow us to be of service to our Warmaster--"

"...Karasawa-sempai." A hushed, nervous voice cuts in. "Aren't you...I mean, I know she's our Warmaster and everything, but aren't you laying it on a bit thick? There might be cameras or something..."

"Just let me have my fun, please, Tokiko-kun?" The first voice, still flowery and light, gains a bit of a strained edge. "This is why I hate being bundled into a squad with Vindicares. You people are against the very idea of fun!"

Silence.

..."Oh. Miki. It's just you." The first voice immediately loses its lofty, sing-song tones, becoming flat and nearly deadpan. "Where's the Warmaster? And why are you just in a towel?"

"Eat a DICK, Karasawa." You hear Sayaka snarl. "And what the hell do you think I'm wearing a towel for? I was in the middle of a fucking shower before you started making a goddamn racket! Do you have any idea what time it is?!"

"Well. You have my apologies, then." Enishi replied, blatantly insincere about it. "But as you may have heard, we are here because we have been summoned as reinforcements. The Warmaster asked for us personally, so if you wouldn't mind stepping back, we need to report to her--"

"...You don't need to get in here, Christ! You've got the wrong room, Murderface's sleeping with the principal!"

Silence.

"...I see." Enishi lets out a small, but not quite disappointed, sigh. "Here comes the new Boss, same as the old Boss. Very well, if you'd kindly direct us to--?"

"Behind you. And don't bother me again unless it's an emergency, or if Murderface suddenly dies or something." A muffled slam of a door closing, and its locks being quickly engaged.

"...Charming as always." Enishi remarks, before you hear the footsteps get nearer. "Well, take two, I suppose. And you heard the crazy berserker - try to keep your voices down, please."

"...But we were being quiet--" The second voice once more protests, before being shushed again.

"Matsuda-sama?" You hear Enishi say, knocking gently at the door to Ruri's suite. "Matsuda-sama, I do not wish to interrupt your private time with the client, but we are here. If you could spare a few moments for us to report to you, that would be much appreciated, but...I suppose we can simply wait until morning, if the Warmaster wishes."

"...Do you think she's still awake, sempai?"

"I hope so. Well, perhaps. Kharn, Blessed lady rest her soul, never did sleep during ops. But she always loathed visitors. Not unless it was Miss Malal - the Blessed Lady keep her soul safe always."
